

Archive Fever

Uses of the Document in Contemporary Art

Okwui Enwezor

International Center of Photography, New York

Steidl

Director's Foreword

Photography's sheer ubiquity has shaped collective memory of social and cultural experiences to a degree that pictures can often appear to function as a substitute for the experiences themselves. Those born after the Civil Rights movement experience the dogs and hoses trained on African Americans by police in Birmingham through Charles Moore's famous photographs for Life magazine. Photographs and film footage of Allied soldiers liberating the concentration camps have powerfully shaped our sense of the Holocaust. Tapping into this collective visual memory, the artists presented in Archive Fever: Uses of the Document in Contemporary Art mediate and interrogate such visceral and loaded photographs, posing a range of questions and dilemmas about how we reconstruct and interpret the past. These works question the assumption that the photographic archive is a collection of "objective" documents and suggests how they shape our consciousness and function as tools of power.

Archive Fever asks us to reevaluate the accuracy of seemingly straightforward terms: "archival," "document," "photographic." The works presented here stretch the definitions of photography to include film and video, but also sculptural interpretations, large-scale installations, and hand-drawn photo-based work. Expanding boundaries is a particular domain of the organizer of Archive Fever, Okwui Enwezor. An internationally renowned curator of contemporary art and Adjunct Curator at ICP, Mr. Enwezor has made an immense contribution to the global scope of ICP's exhibition programs, beginning in 2006 with his Snap Judgments: Contemporary Issues in African Photography.

An exhibition as ambitious as Archive Fever would not be possible without the commitment of many organizations and individuals. For their generous lead support, I wish to express my deepest appreciation to the ICP Exhibitions Committee, and to Robert and Gayle Greenhill and Jeffrey A. and Marjorie G. Rosen. We are grateful also to the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs for supporting this exhibition and its public programs, and to Robert and Meryl Meltzer, Artur Walther, and the ICP Publications Committee for their essential support. Additional funding was contributed by the British Council and the Cultural Services of the French Embassy. We thank these generous individuals and agencies for enabling us to bring this ambitious project to fruition.

I would also like to acknowledge the contributions of the many dedicated individuals who brought this complex project to completion. They include Brian Wallis, ICP Director of Exhibitions and Chief Curator; Assistant Curator Vanessa Rocco, who played an important role in coordinating the exhibition; researcher James Thomas and interns Marilia Fernandes and Yulia Tikhonova, who provided invaluable assistance with myriad details of the exhibition and publication. I wish to express my gratitude to Philomena Mariani, Director of Publications, who supervised the preparation of the catalogue; Elizabeth Van Meter, Publications Assistant; and our publications partner Gerhard Steidl, designers

Bernard Fischer and Julia Melzner, and the entire staff at Steidl Publishing. I also wish to thank Registrar Barbara Woytowicz; Todd McDaniel and Maanik Singh of the production staff for their work on the exhibition; and Alicia Cheng and her colleagues at mgmt design, who expertly designed the exhibition installation and its accompanying graphics.

Finally, I wish to extend my deepest thanks to the artists participating in Archive Fever. Their works illuminate the workings of history, memory, mourning, and loss in these complex times.

Willis E. Hartshorn
Ehrenkranz Director

Curator's Acknowledgments

An exhibition of this scope is realized with the assistance of persons too numerous to recount, but I will try. At ICP, I thank Willis Hartshorn, Ehrenkranz Director, for his trust and commitment to the projects on which I have worked at the museum. Likewise, I note with immense gratitude the pleasure of working with Brian Wallis, Director of Exhibitions and Chief Curator; I thank him for his unwavering support in this and all my projects. As always, Brian's critical judgment and insight have proved invaluable. Arthur Walther and Meryl Meltzer, co-chairs of the Exhibitions Committee, provided the support and enthusiasm that allowed this project to move forward. Vanessa Rocco, Assistant Curator, has been a wonderful partner, managing all aspects of this exhibition from its inception. I thank her for her collaboration. James Thomas, Researcher, has been invaluable in several projects on which he has worked with me; for Archive Fever, he has more than exceeded the requirements of his task. Karen Hansgen and Philomena Mariani have steered the publication beautifully; I am deeply indebted to their commitment. Phil has my special gratitude for her unstinting editorial rigor and accommodation. I thank Deputy Director Evan Kingsley and his development team for their many efforts and I thank Phyllis Levine, Director of Communications, for her wisdom and advice. I also thank Suzanne Nicholas for her education programming. Todd McDaniel, Maanik Singh, and Barbara Woytowicz worked tirelessly to produce the exhibition, as has Alicia Cheng and her colleagues at mgmt design. Deirdre Donohue, Librarian, is always helpful in providing resources, and project interns Marilia Fernandes and Yulia Tikhonova added crucial research and organizational support. I also thank my ICP colleagues Christopher Phillips, Edward Earle, Carol Squiers, and Kristen Lubben.

For their invaluable assistance, I thank the following: Marian Goodman, Lissa McClure, Catherine Belloy, Karina Dashkalov, Rose Lord, and Hannah Klemm of the Marian Goodman Gallery, New York; David Zwirner, Angela Choon, Cameron Shaw, and Jessica Eckert of David Zwirner Gallery, New York; Mari Spirito, Barbara Corti, and Simon Greenberg of 303 Gallery, New York; Dirk Snauwaert, Wiels, Brussels; Michelle Reyes, Felix Gonzalez-Torres Foundation, New York; Deborah Wye and Emily Talbot, Museum of Modern Art, New York; Paula Cooper, Steve Henry, and Sarah Baron of Paula Cooper Gallery, New York; Matthew Gale and Catherine Clement, Tate Modern, London; Charlotte Schepke and Samantha Swan, Frith Street Gallery, London; Barbara Gladstone and Miciah Hussey, Barbara Gladstone Gallery, New York; Alex Galan, D.A.P., New York; Elizabeth Sussman and Anita Duquette, Whitney Museum of American Art, New York; Jenny Grondin, Tracy Williams Ltd., New York; Jocelyn Davis, Zoe Leonard Studio; Abaseh Mirvali and Michel Blancsubé, Jumex Collection, Mexico City; Nancy Spector, Jodi Myers, and Kim Bush, Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, New York; Martine d'Anglejan-Chatillon and François Chantala, Thomas Dane Gallery, London; Antonio Homem and Xan Price, Sonnabend Gallery, New York; Vicki Gambill, The Broad Art Foundation, Santa Monica; Mia Narell, Lorna Simpson Studio; Esa Epstein, Sepia International, New York; Suhanya

Raffel, Queensland Art Gallery, South Brisbane, Australia; Tom Sokolowski, Greg Burchard, and Heather Kowalski at The Andy Warhol Museum, Pittsburgh; Malcolm Daniel, Douglas Eklund, Lucy von Brachel, and Julie Zeffel at The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; Antje Ehmann; Stef de Belder and Ron Eijkman; Armelle Laborie, Memento!; Peter MacGill and Kimberly Jones, Pace/MacGill, New York; Carlos Basualdo, Philadelphia Museum of Art; Francesco Bonami, Museum of Contemporary Art, Chicago; and Angela Smith Domzal, Wachovia. I want to thank my colleagues at San Francisco Art Institute, especially Chris Bratton, Jennifer Stein, Jennifer Rissler, and Maggie Moffitt.

On a personal note, I would like to thank my mother Bernadette Enwezor, sister Rita Enwezor-Udorji, and friends and colleagues Chika Okeke-Agulu, Salah Hassan, Daniel Faust, Lea Green, Muna El Fituri, and Terry Smith for their continued support.

As always, the artists are the reason why exhibitions happen. It has been my privilege to work with this diverse group of artists, all the more so, for the beauty, power, and complexity of their visions, ideas, and work. I extend my gratitude to all of them for their inspiration.

This book is dedicated to my daughter Uchenna Soraya Enwezor, who continues to delight and inspire me, and to the memory of Linda Pace, whose philanthropic vision left behind a legacy of generosity and support for curators and artists.

Okwui Enwezor
December 2007

Archive Fever: Photography Between History and the Monument

Okwui Enwezor

The archive is first the law of what can be said, the system that governs the appearance of statements as unique events. But the archive is also that which determines that all these things said do not accumulate endlessly in an amorphous mass, nor are they inscribed in an unbroken linearity, nor do they disappear at the mercy of chance external accidents; but they are grouped together in distinct figures, composed together in accordance with multiple relations, maintained or blurred in accordance with specific regularities; that which determines that they do not withdraw at the same pace in time, but shine, as it were, like stars, some that seem close to us shining brightly from far off, while others that are in fact close to us are already growing pale.

—Michel Foucault¹

No single definition can convey the complexities of a concept like the archive such as are contained in Foucault's ruminations on the subject. The standard view of the archive oftentimes evokes a dim, musty place full of drawers, filing cabinets, and shelves laden with old documents, an inert repository of historical artifacts against the archive as an active, regulatory discursive system. It is this latter formulation of the archive that has engaged the attention of so many contemporary artists in recent years. Archive Fever explores the ways in which artists have appropriated, interpreted, reconfigured, and interrogated archival structures and archival materials. The principal vehicles of these artistic practices—photography and film—are also preeminent forms of archival material. The exhibition engages with various modes of artistic production in which the traffic in photographic and filmic documents is not simply emblematic of the development of a vast mass-media enterprise. Rather, it delves into critical transactions predicated on opening up new pictorial and historiographic experiences against the exactitude of the photographic trace.

Photography and the Archive

What are the aesthetic and historical issues that govern photography's relation to the archive? From its inception, the photographic record has manifested "the appearance of a statement as a unique event." Every photographic image has been endowed with this principle of uniqueness. Within that principle lies the kernel of the idea of the photograph as an archival record, as an analogue of a substantiated real or putative fact present in nature. The capacity for mechanical inscription and the order of direct reference that links the photograph with the indisputable fact of its subject's existence are the bedrock of photography and film. The capacity for accurate description, the ability to establish distinct relations of time and event, image and statement, have come to define the terms of archival production proper to the language of those mechanical mediums, each of which give new phenomenological account of the world as image. Photography is simultaneously the documentary evidence and the archival record of such transactions. Because the camera is literally an archiving machine, every photograph, every film is a priori an archival object. This is the fundamental reason why photography and film are often archival records, documents and pictorial testimonies of the existence of a recorded fact, an excess of the seen. The infinitely reproducible, duplicatable image, whether a still picture or a moving image, derived from a negative or digital camera, becomes, in the realm of its mechanical reproduction or digital distribution or multiple projection, a truly archival image. Accordingly, over time, the photographic image has become an object of complex fascination and thus appropriated for myriad institutional, industrial, and cultural purposes—governmental propaganda, advertising, fashion, entertainment, personal commemoration, art. These uses make photography and film critical instruments of archival modernity.

When Walter Benjamin published his essay on art² in the 1930s, photography had been in use for a century. His reflections took up more than the question of aura; he was concerned with how the shift from the hand-fashioned image to the mechanically produced and infinitely reproducible image manifests a wholly new mode of pictorial distribution, a shift not only indexical but temporal. Because eye/hand coordination organized by the camera gave reality a different look, the liberation of the hand from image making had a deep impact on questions of cognition and action. This change of artistic and pictorial parameters became a specific phenomenon of modernity. The advent of mechanical reproduction initiated an archival formation that would overtake all relations to the photographic record: the systems of production and distribution and, more recently, the processes of permanent digital archivization and inscription. Since Kodak's invention of commercial processing capacity at the end of the nineteenth century, the photographic analogue derived from the negative has not only generated an endless stream of faithful reproductions—calling into question the foundational claims of originality on which the pictorial aura of hand-fashioned images depended—it also set the entire world of users into a feverish pace of pictorial generation and accumulation. This archival madness, a "burning with desire" to transpose nature into a pictorial fact, and consequently into an archival system, is succinctly expressed in a letter written by Louis Daguerre to his business partner Nicéphore Niépce: "I am burning with desire to see your experiments from nature."³ Many other desires soon followed, and would go beyond nature; they would encapsulate the entire mode of thinking the world framed within a picture. The desire to make a photograph, to document an event, to compose statements as unique events, is directly related to the aspiration to produce an archive. The character of this archive is captured in W. J. T. Mitchell's notion of "the surplus value of images,"⁴ in which the photograph also enters the world of the commodity. The traffic in the photographic archive rests on the assumption of the surplus value that an image can generate.

Archive as Form

The photographic archive is one of the many ways in which archival production has been developed within the context of art. Marcel Duchamp's miniaturization of his entire corpus into a deluxe edition of reproductions, organized and codified in an archival system cum mobile museum titled La boîte-en-valise (1935–41),⁹ is certainly not the first of such programmatic engagements of the work of art as archive, but it remains one of the most rigorous. Ever since he fashioned this ur-museum in a suitcase, there has existed a fascination within art with the procedures of the museum as archive,¹⁰ as a site of reflection on the prodigious output of historical artifacts, images, and the various taxonomies that govern their relationship to one another. By faithfully creating reproductions of his works that approximate photographic facsimiles, and at the same time creating the conditions for their organization and reception as an oeuvre and an archive, Duchamp appeared to have been grappling with a dilemma, one which placed his works "between tradition and oblivion," to borrow an apt phrase from Foucault.¹¹ La boîte-en-valise is not only a sly critique of the museum as institution and the artwork as artifact, it is fundamentally also about form and concept, as "it reveals the rules of a practice that enable statements both to survive and to undergo regular modification. It is the general system of the formation and transformation of statements."¹² Decades later, such a system was amplified by Marcel Broodthaers in his Musée d'Art Moderne, Département des Aigles (1968).¹³ If the framework for Duchamp's box is the myth of a coherent monographic artistic identity, Broodthaers's endless iteration of photographic copies of eagles and associated objects positioned his archive not in a logic of homogeneous unity but in a field of nonhierarchical heterogeneity. According to Rosalind Krauss, Broodthaers's gambit ushered in what she terms the post-medium condition.¹⁴

Writing about Gerhard Richter's Atlas (1964–present), an open-ended compendium of photographic panels and tableaux initiated by the artist as a reflection on the relationship between the photographic and historiographic, Benjamin Buchloh implicitly recognizes that the principle of collectivization—an important function of museums and archives—has been integral to photography's disciplinary method from its inception. Projects such as Atlas, he notes, have "taken as the principles of a given work's formal organization photography's innate structural order (its condition as archive) in conjunction with its seemingly infinite multiplicity, capacity for serialization, and aspiration toward comprehensive totality . . ."¹⁵ Buchloh casts doubt, however, on the historical coherence of such practices, labeling them "unclassifiable within the typology and terminology of avant-garde art history,"¹⁶ and concluding that "the didactic and mnemonic tracing of historical processes, the establishment of typologies, chronologies, and temporal continuities . . . have always seemed to conflict with the avant-garde's self-perception as providing instantaneous presence, shock, and perceptual rupture."¹⁷ Buchloh argues that Richter's Atlas inherited the conditions of this archival impasse:

Marcel Duchamp, La boîte-en-valise, 1935–41

Leather valise containing miniature replicas, photographs, and color reproductions of works by Duchamp, and one "original" (Large Glass, collotype on celluloid) (69 items)

Overall: 16 x 15 x 4 in. (40.6 x 38.1 x 10.2 cm)

© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York / ADAGP, Paris / Succession Marcel Duchamp

Yet, at the same time, the descriptive terms and genres from the more specialized history of photography—all of them operative in one way or another in Richter's Atlas—appear equally inadequate to classify these image accumulations. Despite the first impression that the Atlas might give, the discursive order of this photographic collection cannot be identified either with the private album of the amateur or with the cumulative projects of documentary photography.¹⁸

Inasmuch as any sensibility may wish to impose a restrictive order on the archive, then, the ability to do so is often superseded by concerns governing the disjunction between systems and methods. According to Lynne Cooke, the logic of Atlas is impeded by the impossibility of assigning a singular rationality to its existence as a unity: "Atlas hovers," she writes, "between the promise of taxonomic order as divulged in the archive and the total devastation of that promise . . ."¹⁹

From the above we can establish that the archive is a compensation (in the psychoanalytic sense) of the unwieldy, diachronic state of photography and, as such, exists as a representational form of the ungainly dispersion and pictorial multiplicity of the photograph. The archive as a representation of the taxonomy, classification, and annotation of knowledge and information could also be understood as a representative historical form, which Foucault designates as a historical a priori, defined as a field of archaeological inquiry, a journey through time and space; one whose methodological apparatus does not set "a condition of validity for judgements, but a condition of reality for statements."²⁰ Whatever the statements, however encompassing its accumulated, tabulated, indexed, and organized form of representation may appear, it is also true, as Foucault notes, that the archive of a society, a culture, or a civilization cannot be described exhaustively: or even, no doubt, the archive of a whole period. On the other hand, it is not possible for us to describe our own archive, since it is from within these rules that we speak, since it is that which gives to what we can say—and to itself, the object of our discourse—its modes of appearance, its forms of existence and coexistence, its system of accumulation, historicity, disappearance. The archive cannot be described in its totality; and in its presence it is unavoidable. It emerges in fragments, regions, levels . . .²¹

How is the validity of statements posited in an archive to be judged? For Jacques Derrida, statements acquire legitimacy through "a science of the archive," which "must include the theory of . . . institutionalization, that is to say, the theory both of the law which begins by inscribing itself there and of the right which authorizes it."²² The archive achieves its authority and quality of veracity, its evidentiary function, and interpretive power—in short, its reality—through a series of designs that unite structure and function. The archival structure defines what Derrida calls the principle of "domiciliation," by which the institutional form is achieved, the archive as a physical entity is manifested in a concrete domain: "The dwelling, this place where they dwell permanently . . ." ²³ He compares this condition of existence, the process of domiciliation, to a house arrest. ²⁴ The archival form is fundamental to the archive's ability to create the "condition of validity of judgements" (Foucault) to be undertaken. Derrida calls this function "consignation," the task through which the archive conducts "the functions of unification, of identification, of classification," ²⁵ and so on. However, consignation is to be understood in terms that "do not only mean, in the ordinary sense of the word, the act of assigning residence or of entrusting so as to put into reserve (to consign, to deposit), in a place and on a substrate, but here the act of consigning through gathering together signs." ²⁶ The very activity of consignation, therefore, "aims to coordinate a single corpus, in a system or a synchrony in which all the elements articulate the unity of an ideal configuration." ²⁷

Gerhard Richter, Atlas, 1964–, installation views, Dia Center for the Arts, New York, 1995

Courtesy Dia Center for the Arts

Photo: Cathy Carver

The terms of reference for Duchamp's La boîte-en-valise, Broodthaers's Musée d'Art Moderne, Département des Aigles, and Richter's Atlas correspond precisely to both Foucault's and Derrida's different takes on the archive. The portable box in which Duchamp organized his then-extant works as reproductions, or the heterogeneity of Broodthaers's curatorial arrangement, or Richter's perpetual commentary on photography as a mnemonic object, become and form a logic of domiciliation and consignation (gathering together signs that designate the artist's oeuvre), as well as a condition of reality of the statements of each of the individual works, the narrative it has to convey, the a priori archive of the artist's practice. Such methods conform to what Hal Foster identifies as the "archival impulse" ²⁸ that suffuses current artistic practice. Artists interrogate the self-evidentiary claims of the archive by reading it against the grain. This interrogation may take aim at the structural and functional principles underlying the use of the archival document, or it may result in the creation of another archival structure as a means of establishing an archaeological relationship to history, evidence, information, and data that will give rise to its own interpretive categories. ²⁹

Intelligence Failure / Archival Disappointment

Permit me to recall an important moment in recent history: the frantic search for evidence of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction (WMD) undertaken by a coterie of United Nations investigators in the months leading up to the Iraq War in 2003. The scramble to find the weapons included a search through the Iraqi archives for documents containing evidence of a weapons system's many components: designs, bills of procurement, building plans, site maps, photographs of laboratories. The Iraqi administration presented the inspectors with volumes of documentation, reams of paper, a mountain of information showing the initial attempts to constitute a weapons program and later efforts to dismantle the operational capacity to build an arsenal of future destruction. Meanwhile, the U.S. wanted to retain exclusive hermeneutic authority over any "intelligence": if the "intelligence" accorded with the U.S. view, then it fulfilled and consolidated the Bush administration's claims; if it contradicted those claims, the burden of proving the negative rested on the other side. We witnessed this catch-22 in relation to both the United Nations inspectors led by Hans Blix and the International Atomic Energy Agency officials, who were all but accused of being agents of Iraqi disinformation.³⁰ As the Bush administration's "slam dunk"³¹ theory of an a priori indisputable fact—the existence of WMD—unraveled, it attempted (without success) to bolster the moral imperative behind its threats to invade Iraq.

We now know the full extent of the fraudulence of U.S. and British intelligence (truth) claims.³² The calculated manufacture of "intelligence" to fit the policy of Iraq's invasion disturbs the integrity of and confidence in the archive as a site of historical recall, as the organ through which we come to know what has been, that is to say, the raw material constituting knowledge and a reference in which to read, verify, and recognize the past.

The manipulation of evidence to justify war underscores the imperatives of modern intelligence gathering as a fundamental drive toward acquisition and control of information and comprehensive knowledge. Of course, the idea of an empire that sees "intelligence" as the total mastery and domination of an adversary through its superior power of clairvoyance is not new. Thomas Richards, author of The Imperial Archive, locates the origins of this archival impulse in nineteenth-century Victorian England, during the heyday of British imperialism. Induced into a fever of knowledge accumulation and intelligence gathering, the Victorian archival industry began a process whereby information concerning the known world was synchronized and unified.³³ With the establishment of institutions such as the Royal Geographical Society, the Royal Photographic Society, the British Museum, and the Colonial Office, Victorian Britain initiated one of the most prodigious archive-making periods in modern history. Although it was an empire of vast territories, patrolled by mighty naval fleets and army regiments, imperial Britain was above all founded on the production of paper, assorted documents, and images, all of which spawned other documents, along with the systems organizing them and the rules for distributing their content. The process of archival synchronization and unification was accomplished by reconciling specific forms of discrete, quantifiable, and tested knowledge (positive knowledge) into universal principles of aggregated data. As Richards points out, the objectives of such unification were attended by ideological manipulation: "Unawares, the archival gaze has combined the triple register of inquiry, measure and examination to prepare data to be acted upon by the variable modalities of power."³⁴

Overseeing this immense accumulation of data—photographs, images, maps, surveys, intelligence, taxonomies, classifications: Derrida's "science of the archive"—was the imperial periscopic eye. It was in this era that the impenetrable territory of Tibet—impenetrable, that is, to imperial ambition and the Western gaze—was mapped. In the absence of reliable maps of the Himalayan territory, and unable to send British surveyors into Tibet, the British India Survey resorted to an ingenious plan devised by one Major Thomas G. Montgomerie, a member of the Royal Engineers Corps: the survey and mapping of Tibet would be conducted with "native explorers,"³⁵ actually a network of Hindu pundit spies from the Indian Himalayas. Beginning around 1865, the pundits, disguised as Buddhist pilgrims traveling through Tibet, compiled detailed statistics and measurements of their journey. Peter Hopkirk traces this story of daring archival espionage that may equal Google Maps for its pinpoint precision:

Montgomerie first trained his men, through exhaustive practice, to take a pace of known length which would remain constant whether they walked uphill, downhill or on the level. Next he taught them ways of keeping a precise but discreet count of the number of such paces taken during a day's march. This enabled them to measure immense distances with remarkable accuracy and without arousing suspicion. Often they traveled as Buddhist pilgrims, many of whom regularly crossed the passes to visit the holy sites of the ancient Silk Road. Every Buddhist carried a rosary of 108 beads on which to count his prayers, and also a small wood and metal prayer-wheel which he spun as he walked. Both of these Montgomerie turned to his advantage. From the former he removed eight beads, not enough to be noticed, but leaving a mathematically convenient 100. At the hundredth pace the Pundit would automatically slip one bead. Each complete circuit of the rosary thus represented 10,000 paces.

The total for the day's march, together with any other discreet observations, had somehow to be logged somewhere safe from prying eyes. It was here that the prayer-wheel, with its copper cylinder, proved invaluable. For concealed in this, in place of the usual hand-written scroll of prayers, was a roll of blank paper. This served as a log-book, which could easily be got at by removing the top of the cylinder . . . Then there was the problem of a compass, for the Pundit was required to take regular bearings as he journeyed. Montgomerie decided to conceal this in the lid of the prayer-wheel. Thermometers, which were needed for calculating altitudes, were hidden in the tops of the pilgrims' staves. Mercury, essential for setting an artificial horizon when taking sextant readings, was hidden in cowrie shells . . ."³⁶

This arduous operation, in which archive making was subtended by the principles of espionage, was undertaken in service to the empire's insatiable appetite for knowledge of the unknown. Beyond that, such knowledge had to be compiled, "classified,"³⁷ unified, and submitted to tools of regulatory control. Constructing these "paradigms of knowledge . . . seemed to solve the problem of imperial control at a distance."³⁸ By the turn of the century, the details of the Tibet archive had been transformed into "classified" information "placed under the jurisdiction of the state."³⁹

Classifying information, data, or knowledge is today a pervasive method of regulatory control of the archive. And this control over the flow of information is strengthened by other networks of archival manipulation or data generation. Google Earth, for instance, allows some aspects of its spatial modeling to be public while others are suppressed in the interest of national security. Tibet is but one of many examples of the attempt to construct an empire of archival knowledge as part of the regime of national security. Richards cites Rudyard Kipling's novel Kim—a book ordered around the pursuit of power and authority—as an example of the obsession with correlating classified knowledge and national security. Throughout the nineteenth century, the “great game” of imperial expansion was an acquisitive game of spatial dominance but one invested with the superior capacity to control the flow of information through the archive. Knowledge was equated with national security; accordingly the imperial archival system positioned “itself not as the supplement of power but as its replacement.”⁴⁰ The archival construction of Tibet, the intimate knowledge gained of this closed society, began as a work of map making and geography linked to espionage and intelligence gathering. From that, an information society was created. But it was the foundational principle of the state's power to monopolize knowledge, and to excise from public view archive material it deemed too sensitive, that became the paramount legacy of imperial archive making.

This is the proper context in which to read the battle over archival information between the U.S. and the Iraqi government arbitrated by the United Nations. Let us recall another episode in that spectacle of archival disinformation: when then-U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell announced that a document obtained by British intelligence and in the possession of American officials showed indisputably that the Iraqi regime was actively seeking to buy “yellow cake” uranium from the African nation of Niger. The document supporting Powell's claim was soon revealed to be a forgery, the “pure fantasy” of an intelligence agent. In this story of archives and counter-archives, are we not reminded of how deeply embedded the processes of archival production are in the modern state form? For the gathering and interpretation of intelligence—more accurately, data—are nothing more than the obsessive principle of archival formation.

Archive as Medium

The artworks that comprise this exhibition represent some of the most challenging interpretive, analytical, and probing examples of contemporary art's confrontation with and examination of the historical legacy of archival production. The artists presented here are not concerned simply with accumulation, sorting, interpreting, or describing images, though they surely do engage these practices. They are also motivated by a process described by Foucault as a “tracing-back to the original precursors, towards the search for a new type of rationality and its various effects.”⁴¹ Here we witness firsthand how archival legacies become transformed into aesthetic principles, and artistic models become historicizing constructs, so that in the works, and the ways in which they are arrayed before us, we experience firsthand their effects. The variety and range of archival methods and artistic forms, the mediatory structures that underpin the artists' mnemonic strategies in their use of the archive, and the conceptual, curatorial, and temporal principles that each undertakes, point to the resilience of the archive as both form and medium in contemporary art. In the works, we are confronted with relationships between archive and memory, archive and public information, archive and trauma, archive and ethnography, archive and identity, archive and time.

These are some of the issues this exhibition seeks to illuminate. Archive Fever does not simply organize for the viewer the visual effects of the archival form or medium. Nor is its central preoccupation with assessing the cleverness of the critiques of archival truth inherent in some of the examples presented here. The aim is not to produce a theory of the archive but to show the ways in which archival documents, information gathering, data-driven visual analysis, the contradictions of master narratives, the invention of counter-archives and thus counter-narratives, the projection of the social imagination into sites of testimony, witnessing, and much more inform and infuse the practices of contemporary artists.

The "archival impulse" has animated modern art since the invention of photography. As many historians have argued, the principle of the archival was anticipated by the regulative order of the photographic dispersal through mass media. This dispersal had ideological implications, especially with regard to forms of propaganda. Mass media enabled the public manipulation of photography. And it came to determine the status of the documentary apparatus. In his essay "An Archival Impulse," Hal Foster elaborates on the long history of archivization as a structural mode of organizing the proliferating images of photographic media, particularly in some of the formats of the early avant-garde in Russia and Germany between the world wars, for instance, the photofiles of Rodchenko and photomontages of Heartfield. Taking us into the era of Richter's generation, Foster writes that the early modernist uses of the photographic index and the archival attributes they establish between public and private, between documentation and commentary, critique and analysis, power and subordination, were "even more variously active in the postwar period, especially as appropriated images and serial formats became common idioms (e.g., in the pinboard aesthetic of the Independent Group, remediated representations from Robert Rauschenberg through Richard Prince, and the informational structures of Conceptual art, institutional critique, and feminist art)."⁴²

These various modes of deploying appropriated images and using photographic documentation to inform the principle of the artwork were largely what gave rise to the conceptual system of archival photography, the mode by which many came to know, through documentation, varied actions or performances of contemporary art that relied on the archival reproductions of the artistic event or action, a world of practices staged as much for itself as for the camera.⁴³ Without the photographic or filmic record of events or performances, the condition of reality on which their received effect as works of art depended would not have existed. Durational pieces that rely on recording or documentation, such as the work of Ana Mendieta, Hamish Fulton, Richard Long, and Gabriel Orozco, whose activities of inscription were only possible through the medium of photographic representation, are examples of this kind. In others, such as the emblematic work of Robert Smithson, the physical work and its citations stand as two separate systems. But this relationship between past event and its document, an action and its archival photographic trace, is not simply the act of citing a preexisting object or event; the photographic document is a replacement of the object or event, not merely a record of it. "The document . . . is no longer for history an inert material through which it tries to reconstitute what men have done or said, the events of which only the trace remains; history is now trying to define within the documentary material itself unities, totalities, series, relations."⁴⁴

Documents into Monuments: Archives as Meditations on Time⁴⁵

The enumeration of these various archival registers, in which the formats of contemporary art address the urgency of visual information in the age of mechanical reproduction, is one of Archive Fever's referential sources, but the exhibition also extends beyond it. The issue grappled with here is not so much the artist's employment of archival logic but, rather, the artist's relationship to images or instruments of mass culture or media in which the archival is sought out—especially in the digital arena—as part of a broad culture of sampling, sharing, and recombining of visual data in infinite calibrations of users and receivers. We are fundamentally concerned with the overlay of the iconographic, taxonomic, indexical, typological, and archaeological means by which artists derive and generate new historical as well as analytical readings of the archive. In an illuminating passage, Foucault captures the "burning desire" behind some of these types of archivization, in which artists undertake to "'memorize' the monuments of the past, transform them into documents, and lend speech to those traces which, in themselves, are often not verbal, or which say in silence something other than what they actually say . . ."⁴⁶ Here, a fundamental question persists: it concerns the relationship between temporality and the image, or, rather, the object and its past. According to Foucault, this relationship is a prevalent one, so much so, he claims, that "in our time, history is that which transforms documents into monuments."⁴⁷

Much of the photographic production of Craigie Horsfield exists in these splices of time and image, document and monument. In the late 1970s, Horsfield commenced one of the most sustained and unique artistic investigations around the governing relationship between photography and temporality. Working with a large-format camera, he traveled to pre-Solidarity Poland, specifically to the industrial city of Krakow, then in the throes of industrial decline and labor agitation. There he began shooting a series of ponderous and, in some cases, theatrically antiheroic black-and-white photographs comprising portraits, deserted street scenes, and machinery. Printed in large-scale format with tonal shifts between sharp but cool whites and velvety blacks, these images underline the stark fact of the subject, whether of a lugubriously lit street corner or a solemn, empty factory floor, or portraits of young men and women, workers and lovers. The artist worked as if he were bearing witness to the slow declension of an era, along with a whole category of people soon to be swept away by the forces of change. Magda Mierwa and Leszek Mierwa—ul. Nawojki, Krakow, July 1984 (1990) is a haunting double portrait of a couple, a bearded man and a woman, each staring so intently at the camera that it appears they were themselves witnesses to, rather than specimens of, a passing age. The scene is lit in such a way that the background literally dissolves around the sitters, enveloping them in inky blackness. The image emits an eerie silence, as if touching the sentient melancholy of the man and woman. With their stern, stubborn mien, they stand before us as the condemned.

E. Horsfield. Well Street, East London. August 1987 (1995) is, again, exemplary of Horsfield's careful, annotative as well as denotative employment of the photographic as the weight of time that presses upon the image. The principle of photographic portraiture, in this instance, the depiction of the body, defines the traditional imperative of Horsfield's approach to image making. The second aspect of his production takes it further: it sketches the subtle time lag between the creation of the image and its realization a few years later. In this rich black-and-white print of a reclining female nude, the surrounding field is rendered in sharp, tonal contrasts around the shadowed, slightly turned face. As with many of Horsfield's photographs, the caption indicates the exact date of its making, next to the year of its full realization as a work. In so doing, he calls our attention to the importance of archival time in the consideration of the image. Here, the time of making functions as a shadow archive next to the flat panel of the large-scale print.⁴⁸

Horsfield's work is engaged with a conscious temporal delay of the archive, illustrating both a slice of time and its slow immensity. Even if not quite a longue durée, the time lag between photographing and printing is often protracted—sometimes years elapse before an image is conjured, a fact made clear in the captioning. Horsfield insists on the viewer's ability to decipher the denotative aspect of the image as a literal archive of time, as if the exposure is drawn out over many years. His work is one of two examples—the other being Stan Douglas's Overture—presented here that captures the archival potential of photographic technology as fundamentally an archaeology of time. Horsfield's photographs—unique, uneditioned, unrepeatable—operate at the break between temporalities, between archival time and linear time. They are often active meditations on the very nature of time and how it acts on memory and experience, encompassing it and slowing it down. The disjunction between the instant in which the image is recorded and the moment it is finally printed produces two instances of the archive: first, the archival time of the image, and second, the archival register of its reproduction. The difference, manifest in the analogical conditions of the tactile, materialist photographic medium of

At the same time, according to his mode of working, new technology does not permit us to do just what he has been so adept at accomplishing—a kind of old-fashioned, predigital photography of non-instantaneous reproduction that allows the image to gel in the artist's own consciousness long before it emerges from its glacial substrate.⁴⁹

Stan Douglas's Overture (1986) is similarly concerned with the relationship of archive and time, of time passing as a moving image, as a narration. Overture is a looped, 16mm film that stitches together two separate footages shot by the film division of the Edison Company in the Canadian Rockies: one shows Kicking Horse Canyon, shot in 1899, the other White Pass in British Columbia, shot in 1901. To explore the theme of temporality as it structures experience and consciousness, Douglas employs an audio track of recited passages from Marcel Proust's insomniac novel, In Search of Lost Time.⁵⁰ That Proust's book about time and its disappearance is contemporaneous with the Edison Company's film is not coincidental, since Douglas has carefully synchronized text and image as a meditation on the very logic of time as it bears on the question of history and identity, nature and culture, positivism and romanticism.

In contrast to Horsfield's photographic projects, which are constituted around perceptual breaks in linear time, Douglas's Overture emphasizes cyclical temporality. By deploying a looping mechanism, the filmic narrative appears seamless. Though the film is stitched together in three sections, and the passage from Proust is incorporated as six separate segments, through two rotations, the loop allows the experience of the film to occur as an endless revolution of image and time, suturing breaks in time and images, transforming the filmic space into a closed circuit.⁵¹ Scott Watson argues that this endless rotation is not merely a technical representation of time, a mode that Douglas has explored in other projects; rather, the looping device becomes the means by which a confluence occurs between "mechanical time, which proceeds through repetition, and human time, which is known through memory."⁵² The careful calibration of mechanical and mnemonic temporality begins at the first emergence of the film as a self-consciously driven operation through the camera's sweeping views of the landscape up to the point where the train carrying it plunges into the blankness of the tunnel, only to emerge on the other end where the manipulated editing posits a steady continuation. Through this continuation, the establishing shot of the first sequence becomes the anchor for the circularity of the loop to suggest nonlinear temporality. The break in linearity that is crucial to Douglas's proposal delinks the film from its narrative construction, showing instead "its rhythmic, hypnotic effects on the viewer, in an experience of time-depth and repetition."⁵³

Jef Geys's work Day and Night and Day and . . . (2002) belongs to this temporal category in which the archive is used to elicit the boundless procession of discrete levels of time, as a juncture between past and present. Geys's work provokes an interaction with the archive as a chronotope—that is, a coordination of space and time. It is both a personal and cultural meditation on time and the archive. Constituted out of more than forty years of photographic output comprising tens of thousands of

Marcel Duchamp, La boîte-en-valise, 1935–41
Leather valise containing miniature replicas, photographs, and color reproductions of works by Duchamp, and one "original" (Large Glass, collotype on celluloid) (69 items)
Overall: 16 x 15 x 4 in. (40.6 x 38.1 x 10.2 cm)
© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York / ADAGP, Paris / Succession Marcel Duchamp

images taken by the artist from the late 1950s to 2002, the thirty-six-hour film is not only structurally about the flow of images from a time past into the present; by virtue of its languorous movement, unfolding one panel at a time, the form of its delivery is also intended to confound the ability to distill the film into an index of a life's work. Working with the basic format of an inventory, in almost chronological register, the photographs are activated as moving pictures by slow dissolves. Nothing much happens in the film apart from shifts in tone, gradations of muted gray and lightness, as the images unspool in a horizontal band. Unlike Richter's Atlas, Geys's work is not one of accumulation and collecting; rather, it is an inventory of ephemeral images, slowly and arduously exposed one frame followed by the next, and next, day and night and day . . . The temporal relationship between each image is established through sheer density. The basic means of this proto-cinematic work belie the conceptual nature of its endless pursuit—as in the monologue to Douglas's Overture—of history as the passage of time, as the relentless inscription of private memory onto the space of a collective public culture.

Archive and Public Memory

For nearly a century, artists have turned to the photographic archive in order to generate new ways of thinking through historical events and to transform the traditional ideas surrounding the status of the photographic document. In recent years, artists have interrogated the status of the photographic archive as a historical site that exists between evidence and document, public memory and private history. Few have matched Andy Warhol's profound reflections on photography's morbid hold on the modern imagination. Though seemingly interested in celebrity and media spectacle, Warhol grasped the potential of such images as a means of plumbing the psychic ruptures in the American collective imaginary, as a speculum for examining the violence, tragedies, and traumas of the American self.⁵⁴ Building on archival analyses of visual history, oftentimes generated in the media—as is the case with Race Riot (ca. 1963)—considerations of the relationship between documentary information converge with aspects of witnessing and collective memory. The uses to which Warhol subjected the archive of mass media have engendered and encoded some of the most sustained reflexive accounts on photographs as an incunabulum of public memory. Warhol's images culled from media reports of misfortune and privation (suicides, car crashes, electric chairs, racist police officers and vicious dogs) delineate a grid of social lives. Anne Wagner, in a masterful reading of Warhol's paintings and prints made from a photo-essay by Charles Moore initially published in Life, makes the case for Warhol as a history painter.⁵⁵

Warhol's Race Riot is emblematic of the connection between archive and trauma,⁵⁶ what Wagner calls the "registration of the glamour and redundancy and immanent violence of American life under late capitalism."⁵⁷ But the trauma explicated in Race Riot is of a different order than that found in the

Andy Warhol, Mechanical ("The Dogs' Attack is Negroes' Reward," from Life magazine, May 17, 1963), 1963

Newsprint clipping, graphite, tape, and gouache on heavyweight paper

20 x 22 1/2 in. (50.8 x 57.2 cm)

The Andy Warhol Museum, Pittsburgh. Founding Collection, Contribution The Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts, Inc.

© 2007 Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts / Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York

THE DOGS' ATTACK IS NEGROES' REWARD

ATTACK DOGS Will vicious guard dogs be used to keep the streets clean? That's the question that's been asked in the world for Birmingham's Negroes. If the Negroes themselves had not asked, they would hardly have asked for greater help for their cause than City Police Commissioner Eugene "Bull" Connor lately gave. Ordering his men to be white spectators none year, he said: "I want you to see the dogs work. Look at those Negroes run!" This outrageous sequence—based as it is on a Negro gun for hangers ripped off by Connor's dogs—in the stirring-getting jack pot of the Negroes' provocation.

© 1963 LIFE

MR golden please make contrasts very black & white separate 3 screens
Andy Warhol

luridly sensationalist images of the Saturday Disasters series.⁵⁸ The latter embody a kind of popular grotesque, a fascination with a cartoonish kind of horror in which the victims—smashed against windshields, trapped in burning cars, impaled on electrical poles on dark American highways and suburban streets—become fodder for the entertainment industry. Revisiting traumatic violence in this way, the scenes of death and their various archival returns become part of everyday spectacle. “The result,” Wagner observes, “is images caught between modes of representation: stranded somewhere between allegory and history.”⁵⁹

If Race Riot allegorizes a peculiarly midcentury American crisis, such a crisis constitutes the sociological ground for the glossary of images in Felix Gonzalez-Torres's Untitled (Death by Gun) (1990), an index of grainy black-and-white photographs of 464 people who died from gunshots during a one-week period, from May 1 to May 7, 1989, across the cities of America.⁶⁰ Like all of the artist's stacked offset pieces, Untitled consists of several hundred sheets of printed paper endlessly available for viewers to take away and endlessly replenished to maintain an ideal height. The work's somber content—images of the dead stare back at the viewer, with numbing silence—transforms its structure from archival printed sheet to sculptural monument. The allusive character of this extraordinary but deceptive work operates at the level of two kinds of archival practice. First, it embodies Foucault's idea of the document turned into a monument, here subtly transformed from mere representation to a kind of altarpiece. One can also argue that the second effect of the work, as a literal archive, is a reversal of the first, and therefore Untitled oscillates between document and monument, shifting from the archival to the monumental and from that to the documentary. In this collation of obituaries, a wound is exposed as the sign of a shocking collective trauma; the seeming randomness of relationships between victims coalesces into a unity through the time frame of their deaths. This running tally illuminates the images within the reportorial or documentary boundary specific to the account of each victim. The photographs are organized on the white sheet of paper in no apparent order or hierarchical arrangement, without regard for race, gender, class, age, or circumstance of death (suicides and homicides). The democracy of death is spotlighted here, irrespective of victim.

Like Warhol, Gonzalez-Torres addresses a peculiarly American issue. Yet this work differs from Warhol's in a crucial respect. If Race Riot represents the monumentalization of the document as history painting, Gonzalez-Torres's archive of random deaths memorializes the victims. It is a token of remembrance and a work of mourning.

Ilán Lieberman also enlists the archive as a form of commemoration in Niño Perdido (2006–7), a series of drawings based on photographs of missing children whose disappearances were reported in local Mexican newspapers. Alternating between document and monument, information and photography, Niño Perdido functions as a kind of pre-obituary for the lost who may never be found. Lieberman's use of newspaper photographs of the missing children alerts us to the wide-ranging deployment of the photographic portrait as an index of memory, as an image of identification and sometimes disidentification. In each carefully drawn image, he has painstakingly recreated the exact pictorial format of the original newspaper image, as if also creating a memorial to the lost child.

It is difficult to come to terms, artistically, with the events of September 11, 2001. The destruction of the World Trade Towers in Lower Manhattan instantly transformed the site into a memorial and monument; Ground Zero became a shrine and a sacred ground. To broach the event that spawned so many iconic images is to touch a living wound, to experience the vividness with which its memory still reverberates around the world. The breaching of the two towers by the force of the exploding planes created an indelible iconography of the massive structures burning and collapsing. The images were instantly broadcast across the world, with numbing repetition, on television and the Internet, in newspapers and magazines, and continue to be replayed every anniversary. The traumatic images became archival the instant the first footage surfaced and the need for documentary accounts grew. September 11 created a new iconomy,⁶¹ a vast economy of the iconic linking archive to traumatic public memory. As the circulation of these images continues unabated, it is fair to ask what their status is beyond their initial documentary purpose as evidence of two incomprehensible acts of violence. Have the images become emblematic more of the aftermath than of the event itself? How does one revisit, not the event itself, but its aftermath, its mediatised manifestation? For many, to say more with images of September 11 is already to say too much, to lapse into cheap vulgarity.

These are questions we must grapple with in Hans-Peter Feldmann's new project, 9/12 Front Page (2001), an installation (presented here for the first time) documenting the media response to September 11 through a collection (an archive) of some 100 front pages of European and other international newspapers published on September 12, 2001, a day after the horrors unfolded. Does seeing the events from distant shores change its fundamental impact or its political and collective meaning in America? And what about showing these front pages in the very city where the carnage happened, seven years after the fact? This is Feldmann's provocation.

Feldmann abandoned painting in the late 1960s to focus exclusively on the photographic medium. Since then, he has been concerned, first, with photography's social and political meaning in the context of public culture, and second, with the disjuncture between the ubiquity of the photographic image as it developed a private cult of commemoration, and the evacuation of meaning that ensued as photographic images became empty signs. Mixing the high and low, private and public, the artful and kitsch, Feldmann's seemingly offhanded, anti-aesthetic, "anti-photographic"⁶² approach is undermined by the gravity of the subjects he engages—such as in Die Toten, 1967–1993 (1998), a work dealing with images of terrorism in Germany—and the systematic, regulated format in which he recalibrates his collected or produced photographic images into new structures of interpretation. 9/12 Front Page, like Die Toten, compels a different register of ethical and political disclosures. Do the fluttering sheets of newspaper illuminate the dark events of September 11, or do they banalize and ultimately diminish their projected impact? Is September 11 principally a media event for the global pub-

Hans-Peter Feldmann, Die Toten, 1967–93, 1998
90 works
Dimensions variable
Courtesy 303 Gallery, New York
© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York /
VG Bild-Kunst, Bonn

lic? With no accompanying commentary, this material collected from different media sources, in different nations, cities, and languages, implicitly asks the viewer whether it can be treated as a work of art or merely a kind of public testimony. As a work concerned with public memory and media imagination, 9/12 Front Page addresses the intersection of iconographic shock and spectacle—such as Zapruder's footage of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy; it also explores the terms around which photography mediates history and document, event and image. Or how media intervene into the archive and public memory. Buchloh's formulation of the "anomic archive," exemplified by Richter's Atlas, versus the utopian project of photomontagists of the later

1920s is relevant here: "the organizational and distributional form will now become the archive . . ." ⁶³ This aspect of Feldmann's practice, in which images and their contexts are constantly shuffled and represented in new forms of reception—in book works, newsprint editions, bound photocopied files—is developed from the understanding that, far from the experience of anomie, "the photographic image in general was now defined as dynamic, contextual, and contingent, and the serial structuring of visual information implicit within it emphasized open form and a potential infinity, not only of photographic subjects eligible in a new social collective but, equally, of contingent, photographically recordable details and facets that would constitute each individual subject within perpetually changing altered activities, social relationships, and object relationships." ⁶⁴

Modes of artistic reception have engendered and mobilized discursive spaces in which spectators play a signal role in interpellating the work of the archive into highly structured forms of witnessing. One of Archive Fever's premises is that, while the status of the archive today may not be ambiguous, its role in the historical determination of public memory remains unsettled by mnemonic ambivalence. The fascination with the archive as a facet of public memory has retained its power over a wide range of artists who continue to deploy archival images of media as reflexive and documentary responses to events. In Christian Boltanski's meditation on mourning and loss, the powers of the archive as a fundamental site through which we remember remain undiminished, even if the images he deploys and the narratives that he constitutes are more allusive and evocative of an archive than that they represent an actual existing archive. For nearly forty years, Boltanski has posed conceptual and philosophical questions about the stability of the archive as a means by which we come to know and understand the past, not so much as a way to enter the logic of remembering but to explore and expose how photographic images trouble remembering, and in their inconsistency perforate the membrane of private and public memory. In the diverse arrangements to which their assemblage is subjected, Boltanski often treats photographic documents in contradictory ways: sometimes they are collected in a linear structure forming a seemingly coherent narrative, or they may be transformed into fetishized, individualized units on which a dim spotlight is fixed, lending them an almost devotional character, in a panoply of sentimental configurations that, remarkably, are designed to evoke shrines.

Boltanski's work oscillates between inert collections and arrangements of conservation, sometimes pushing his concerns to perverse extremes, blurring the line between the fictive and the historical. In a series of works titled Detective, he draws from a popular French magazine of the same name that details a world of infamy in which crime is vicariously experienced through the spectacle of media

Christian Boltanski, Archive Dead Swiss, 1990
Photographs, lamps, white linen, wooden shelves
128 x 110 1/2 x 22 1/2 in. (325.1 x 280.7 x 57.2 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York
© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York /
ADAGP, Paris

excess. Detective appropriates the norms of the photographic montage, a mode in which devices such as juxtaposition and decontextualization interrupt the regularized flow of pictorial narrative but which also privilege a democracy of relationships over the specificity of the sign. Here, the collectivized arrangements take precedence over the singular and unique. The sequence of images, collated from a variety of sources (sometimes the same images are reused in other ways, thus calling attention to issues of their authenticity as historical documents), suggests such relationships, but while the "spectators of the work know that these photographs are images of individuals involved in crime and murder, . . . [they] have no way of distinguishing between criminals and victims."⁶⁵ In Lessons of Darkness: Archives: Detective (1987), dealing with crime, or Archive Dead Swiss (1990), which alludes to the Holocaust, the configuration of the images and their dilated, soft-focus pictorialism produce an unsettling ambiguity. Again, the general takes precedence over the specific.⁶⁶ The darkness of the Holocaust, for instance, is treated through the structural mechanism by which we come to experience the transformation of private images—snapshots of men, women, children hovering between disappearance and recall—into powerful, monumental, linear arrangements that become meditations on public memory. The collectivized archive becomes a mnemonic reflection on history, building on the anonymity of individual lives to illuminate a kind of generalized singularity, but one nonetheless subordinated to the discourse of a group, a community. Given Boltanski's propensity to mix the fictional and the documentary, however, it is impossible to tell whether in this gallery of individual lives the images are genuine historical documents or merely images that stand in for such individuals. This is the essence of Boltanski's ambivalence, for one never knows what is properly historical or semantically archival.

Artistic assessments of photographic and media documents have contributed to reconsiderations of archival artifacts as evidence connected to broader inquiries into the theme of public memory. These inquiries have in turn inspired critical appraisals by contemporary artists of the genealogy and history of archival practices. As the fascination

Photographer unknown, [Corpse of mother at Bergen-Belsen], April 17, 1945
IWM negative #BU 4027

Printed with the permission of the Trustees of the Imperial War Museum, London

with the images of the Abu Ghraib scandal shows, there are philosophical and political interests at work. However, there is a more profound antagonism toward the status of such images in venues of art. While the Abu Ghraib images have served an instrumental purpose in a public controversy, as a counter-archive to bureaucratically generated amnesia about the Iraq War, torture, and abuse, artistic interventions can activate more complex reflections on the relationship between the photographic document and historical consciousness. Archives represent scenes of unbearable historical weight and therefore open up a productive space for artists in the form of aesthetic, ethical, political, social, and cultural speculation.

We need to reckon with, then, the difference between a purely semantic reading of the archive and its properly situated historical present.⁶⁷ Consider two photographic images, placed side by side. One is a documentary photograph shot on April 17, 1945, toward the end of World War II, in the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp by a member of the British Army's Film and Photographic Unit. It shows the splayed, emaciated body of a young mother partially covered around the chest by a torn blanket, her eyes fixed in the contortions of death. This photograph and many other documentations of the liberation of Bergen-Belsen provide vivid accounts of unimaginable horror.⁶⁸ One reason these images have remained "the most influential of any record or artefact documenting the Nazi concentration camps," as Toby Haggith argues, is that they "are some of the most grotesque and disturbing."⁶⁹ Their wide public dissemination heightened their impact and no doubt contributed to the fascination with their iconography.

The image offered for comparison, Untitled (1987), a silkscreen version of the Bergen-Belsen photograph, is by Robert Morris.⁷⁰ Like Warhol's use of Charles Moore's photographs of the Civil Rights march in Birmingham, Alabama, Morris explicitly references a historical event. Untitled is part of a body of work in which he reconsiders images associated with World War II, such as the Holocaust or the firebombing of German cities like Dresden, a subject recorded by photographers and writers.⁷¹ Morris (again like Warhol) made some alterations to the original Bergen-Belsen image: it has been cropped, so as to fill the frame in a looming, projective fashion; treated with encaustic; and splashed—with almost expressionistic verve—with a blue-purple selenium tint that gives it the jarring, discordant appearance of an Old Master print. Further interventions include an elaborately carved frame, fabricated from a material called Hydrocal used by Morris in the 1980s in a "'baroque' phase of firestorm and holocaust paintings."⁷² Close inspection of the carved frame reveals fragments of human body parts and objects, suggesting a reliquary.

What was Morris attempting to convey through the juxtaposition of the transformed photograph and the sculpturelike frame? Does this decontextualization forty years after the event enhance our understanding of that event? Or does it rupture linear mnemonic continuity, a straight line to that site in which the body of the young mother was photographed? Projected back into historical consciousness through the daring reconstitution of a documentary photograph, Morris's work derives its power

Eyal Sivan, The Specialist: Eichmann in Jerusalem, 1999 Video, color, in English, Hebrew, German, and French with English subtitles, 128 min.
Courtesy the artist

not merely from its subject—Nazi barbarity—but in the way it establishes a heightened sense of ambivalence in an image that is an almost sacred manifestation of archival specificity. What frustrates the reading of Morris's work is not its deliberate aesthetic recomposition and decontextualization but the insistent location of the image within its historically troubled context. Morris does not directly engage Bergen-Belsen but, rather, its archive. Does his engagement with this image owe to a broader enchantment with atrocity, or to the disputed claim made by Norman Finkelstein that images of the atrocity have been manipulated as part of a process he calls the Holocaust industry?⁷³ W. J. T. Mitchell's illuminating reading moves Morris's meditation on atrocity far from Finkelstein's critique by spelling out the temporal relationship between frame and image: the "hydrocal frames with their imprinted body parts and post-holocaust detritus stand as the framing 'present' of the works, trophies or relics encrusted around the past event, the catastrophe that left the fossils as the imprints in which it is enframed. Frame is to image as body is to the destructive element, as present is to past."⁷⁴

Nazi atrocity is also the subject of Eyal Sivan's film The Specialist: Eichmann in Jerusalem (1999), comprised entirely of footage shot during the 1961 trial in Jerusalem of the notorious Nazi officer Adolf Eichmann, who coordinated the efficient deportation of Jews on a mass scale to various death camps during the war.⁷⁵ Sivan's film establishes a distance from the traumatic emotional responses that images of the Holocaust usually elicit, particularly among survivors. It focuses instead on the ordinariness of perpetrators like Eichmann, whose very innocuousness would lead the philosopher Hannah Arendt to coin the memorable phrase "the banality of evil."⁷⁶ In a review of the film, Gal Raz notes that "Sivan uses cinematic-linguistic tactics of deconstruction and reconstruction to give Arendt's claims a filmic articulation."⁷⁷ Wielding the sharp knife of deconstruction, Sivan restructures the chronology of the trial, presenting it out of sequence and thus denying the logic of archival linearity and narrative continuity. The filmmaker's reshaping of the event through a series of editing choices lends drama to the otherwise laborious process of a judicial proceeding. According to Raz, The Specialist is an intervention not only into the archive itself but also into the historical process of the trial, such that the "distorted chronology occurs not only at the level of entire scenes but also on the editorial scale within the scene[s]."⁷⁸ The struggle between prosecutor and defendant—the court, survivors, and the State of Israel pitted against Eichmann and the entire Nazi death apparatus—viti-

ates any insight into the horror of the camps. In fact, in the dramatic turns of the trial, the horror becomes muted, even secondary, as all attention is fixed on Eichmann the beast, the war criminal and Jew hater. Viewers become immersed in the sparring, punctuated by gripping climaxes, between accused and accusers as they confront each other with accusations and denials of responsibility. The footage of the trial conveys the obverse of evil incarnate, posing instead the question of whether the Holocaust is representable without humanizing the perpetrators. On this question, Sivan, like Arendt, who concluded that Eichmann was a common criminal rather than an antisemite, has been condemned for minimizing the testimony of witnesses through his editorial decontextualization.⁷⁹

At issue here is how the works of Sivan and Morris offend the categorical power of the archive as the principal insight into a truth. To refute the singular authority of the archive is also ostensibly to diminish the trauma that it represents. Morris deploys an image that for many shocks and wounds memory; Sivan interrogates the moral certainty of a judicial trial that connects the defendant to the atrocities from which Morris's image stems. Morris's decontextualization of the Bergen-Belsen image and Sivan's out-of-sequence chronology of the Eichmann trial fracture the concordance of archival truth to historical event and the sensational account which documentary photography gives it in relationship to memory. Morris's modified image, drawn from the archival index of horror, suggests a self-conscious ambiguity, if only to expose the archive's muteness, its social incommunicability as the rational voice of truth. Showing the prostrate figure of the woman lying in a field of what appears to be an aqueous liquid, as if recently exhumed or in the process of submersion, seems also to be a critical device for challenging contemporary culture's attentiveness to historical events; or, rather, contemporary art's active interpellation of history and document as a way of working through the difficult zone between trauma and memory. Morris and Sivan's separate interventions are jarring because they seek to examine this troubled zone, along with the power that archives exert on public memory.

Both projects draw from that vast iconomy of images to which the archive belongs. So thoroughly has the archive been domesticated that it has come to serve as a shorthand for memory; whether its images are lifted from newspapers and magazines or downloaded from digital cameras, it presses upon its users and viewers new kinds of ethical, social, political, and cultural relationships to information, history, and memory. Memories of the Holocaust have been passed down to us in a steady stream of testimonies, rituals of witnessing, narratives, films, museums, etc., but the principal knowledge of it, at least for the general public, has been largely visual. Here photographs serve as more than representations of the catastrophe; they have come to be seen as unmediated evidence of it.⁸⁰ All these considerations are part of the activity of artists insofar as the archival impulse has become a commonplace in contemporary art. The fascination with the archive, the inimitable madness of the archive, the constant return to it for verification, inspiration, and source, suggest not only a profound interest in the nature of the archival form found in photography and film but art's relationship to historical reflections on the past.

This exhibition is manifestly a conversation about such reflections. But it also articulates a kind of punctum in that reflection, between generations and genealogies of images, between modes of address and methods. It shows the diverse approaches, the traversed historical grounds, in which to reconsider the status of the archive. Fazal Sheikh's photographs from the series The Victor Weeps: Afghanistan (1997) push the archive toward an incommensurable zone of unbearable loss. Yet it remains a site of vigilance, and of defiance of the events that threaten to swallow up the individual's memories of loved ones, who seem to have been irretrievably lost but must be constantly remembered as emblems of injustice, nobility, and martyrdom. Against the edicts of forgetting, Sheikh's photographs of hands holding tiny passport images of lost or dead family members hover in the gray zone between remembrance and commemoration. The hands extend to the viewer images of sons and brothers, those who—the captions tell us, based on the testimony of their beloved—have been martyred. The hands reach out, as if to touch us with a searing memory, in gestures of affection that are nonetheless marked by the daunting affliction of death.⁸¹

Pushed in other directions, the archival form can become a temporal mechanism for enacting historical events, even—as this exhibition demonstrates—a vehicle for reconstituting history as self-conscious fiction. Such is the case of Walid Raad and The Atlas Group, whose ongoing inquiry into Lebanon's civil war of the 1970s to 1990s is a work of deep perplexity, wounding humor, and fantastic invention. While the Lebanese civil war may have been real, its history is a minefield of interpretation, subjected to constant manipulation by ideological and sectarian forces. Rather than draw us into an official documentary account, whose ultimate hermeneutic value will in any case be disputed by different factions, Raad / The Atlas Group direct us to the contradictions in the historical record and the methods that serve its varied accounts. Borrowing the conventions of the historical novel, the Atlas Group Archive deploys fictional characters—historians, interpreters, witnesses, and archivists—whose investigations and commentary illuminate the disputed terrain of the war's recollections. The Fadi Fakhouri File,⁸² for instance, consists of 225 notebooks and other "evidence" compiled by the wholly imaginary Lebanese historian Dr. Fakhouri of the thousands of car bombs detonated in Beirut during the war; Fakhouri's notebooks were "donated" to the Atlas Group Archive upon his death in 1993. We can make rain, but no one came to ask (2008), included in this exhibition, represents a turn toward abstraction as a strategy. Here the nearly illegible written "evidence" culled from a fictive car-bombing investigation floats in a sea of white topped by horizontal bands of enigmatic image fragments.

Lamia Joreige explores the impact of the same war on Lebanese memories in her video Objects of War (1999–2006). Rather than focus on images from photo albums, Joreige instead asked each of her subjects to select an object that represents for him or her a memory of the war and to speak about its importance. For one subject, the representative object is an old group photograph, for another a drawing of a house plan, for yet another a large blue plastic vessel. The objects trigger a deep archival retrieval. Joreige's method elicits very personal testimonies that operate at the level of object relations and, while manifestly political, reveal a layer of lived experience that confounds official accounts of the war's history.

Homo Sovieticus: Postcommunist Archives

Archival returns are often conjoined with the struggle against amnesia and anomie. A heightened sense of urgency surrounds the demand to remember and commemorate in societies where social codes of communication have been historically unstable or preempted by state repression. Such conditions can produce tendencies to the excessive collectivization of memory, exercises in mass melancholy, and, when liberated from these conditions, attempts to recapture orders of normality that predate the shock of historical rupture and the loss of access to the archive. Diaries are published, formerly prohibited images emerge from the cellar, dissident films surface, testimonies of victims are heroically recast, attics are rummaged, boxes unburied. All these rituals of archival retrieval and performance have been a prominent feature of Eastern European societies since the fall of communism. In the former East Germany, for instance, the opening of the vast archives of the Stasi, the state secret police, precipitated a prolonged period of melancholic reflection and bitter controversy. In Poland, the right-wing government led by the Kaczyński brothers has taken a sinister, pseudo-legal approach to the past through the so-called law of lustration, an attempt to purge Poland's historical memory and political landscape of the taint of communist collaboration as well as undermine the moral position of the Kaczyńskis' political adversaries. Even Lech Walesa, former president of Poland and leader of Solidarity during the dissident rebellions of the late 1970s, has come under suspicion as a collaborator. These official attacks, in which the archive is perversely activated as a tool of disremembering in the service of official paranoia, constitute archival fascism. This is the exact opposite of the projects of Anri Sala, Harun Farocki and Andrei Ujica, and Nomeda and Gediminas Urbonas, all of which deal with the collapse of the communist imperium and the archival legacy of that seismic break with the past.

Anri Sala's video Intervista (1998) begins like a detective story. Several years after the end of communism, Sala, a young Albanian art student studying in Paris, returns to Tirana to visit his parents. In their home, he finds an unprocessed 16mm film in plastic wrapping. The film dates to the communist era but neither of his parents can recall its contents or the circumstances of its making. With no access to a film projector, Sala examines the negative by hand and discovers images of his mother at about the age of thirty. His curiosity piqued, he takes the film back to Paris and proceeds to restore it. To his surprise, he discovers footage of his mother meeting Enver Hoxa, Albania's communist leader whose distrust of the West led him to literally seal the country off from the rest of the world. Even more startling is a scene of his mother delivering a speech to a Communist Party congress held in Albania in the 1970s. The speech, and the audience applause, are inaudible, as the film's sound reel is missing.

Will this fortuitous discovery unlock the secret of Albania's communist past for the artist? Determined to reconnect the visual archive to its proper temporal context, Sala employs lip readers from an Albanian school for the deaf to decipher his mother's speech and therefore provide the film with a more complete narrative, and implicitly its testimony. Once this is accomplished, he splices together the multiple frames of the original footage with subtitles. The reconstituted footage is then supplemented with videotaped conversations between Sala and his mother. This recursive interaction stages Intervista as an archive existing alongside a running commentary on its status as a historical object. The resulting video alternates between the black-and-white archival footage and the color video interviews, a shifting of temporal and historical positions between the communist past and the politically ambiguous present, between self and other, artist and mother, filmic image and its historical meaning. On another level, the back-and-forth also occurs between conditions of archival production and historical reception, between muteness and language, between image and memory. These relays and contextual changes impose a heavy burden on Sala's task as a filmmaker, who is now compelled to shift from the private world of familial affection to the arena of public confession. Is the mother to be judged as a collaborationist or a patriot? Can an intervention into the historical past such as Sala's video adequately convey the complexity of the political, social, and ideological pressures that young men and women of his mother's generation endured in a closed system?

These questions give the archive a new kind of interpretive structure, as the place to examine accounts of collective memory, one taken up in a more archaeological fashion by the Lithuanian artists Nomeda and Gediminas Urbonas. In their multipart work Transaction (2002), the film archive frames an interrogation of the very conditions inherent in the reception of Soviet ideology and the subordination of what was deemed "Lithuanianess." The project began with an examination of more than fifty Lithuanian films made between 1947 and 1997, during the period of Soviet control of the cinematic apparatus. The artists explain:

Most of these films were produced in the ideological currents belonging to the Soviet period. Lenin's slogan on cinema as "of utmost importance of all the arts" was furthered by Stalin's statement: "cinema is illusion, although it dictates the life of its own laws." Having lived in a single-ideology-based mass culture that scripted the space of the homo Sovieticus, there is the question today as to what could have been "authentic," from product to state-of-being.⁸³

To read this transaction, as it were, a number of interlocutors—in this case, Lithuanian feminist intellectuals—were employed by the artists to, on the one hand, deconstruct the patriarchal structure of communist society and, on the other, explore the purported "authenticity" of the Lithuanian feminine voice. Moving back and forth between the old film archives and their translation into the present, the artists point to a conundrum of the Soviet legacy and contemporary Lithuanian ambivalence that must remain a vital aspect of the assessment of the films, both as a means of excavating the communist past and of building a post-Soviet, postcommunist national allegory. This dialectic directs our attention to the fact that, although communism has disappeared from the political culture of Lithuania, its social and cultural repercussions remain.

In a 1970 recording, avant-garde African American musician and poet Gil Scott-Heron proclaimed: "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised."⁸⁴ Released at the height of the Vietnam War, the Civil Rights and Black Power movements, and the radical political projects of American countercultures, the recording represented one of the most astute critiques and dissections of the media spectacle in relation to radical expressions of political subjectivity. Twenty years later, the filmmakers Harun Farocki and Andrei Ujica stood that formulation on its head. Videograms of a Revolution (1993) not only refutes conventional models of media critique and theories of spectacle, it exploits the techniques of spectacle as a tool with which to construct and view history.

Videograms is a montage drawn from 125 hours of amateur and professional archival video footage shot during the ten days of the Romanian Revolution. At a pivotal moment in the uprising, captured on camera and included in Videograms, the gathered revolutionaries declared: "We are victorious! The TV is with us." And so it was. As the film oscillates between television anchors reporting the shifting and indeterminate events, and sweeping views of crowds marching through the streets and battling security forces, it appears that the revolution is literally broadcast live, with every Romanian a participant in the spectacle. The result is a film that harks back to Sergei Eisenstein's October (1927). Videograms is structured with the same methods of editing and montage used by Eisenstein to transform the events of the 1917 Russian Revolution into a film that expresses the subjectivity of popular sentiment. Intercutting professional footage, television studio broadcasts, and raw data recorded by amateurs camped out on the streets, Farocki and Ujica use the archive to rework the relationship between power and popular forms of representation in a mode that moves beyond spectacle and instead utilizes the expressive instruments of Mikhail Bakhtin's notion of the carnivalesque,⁸⁵ elaborating forms of theatrical heteroglossia, the grotesque, critical dialogism. Fusing all of these modes of multiple voicing and subject position, Farocki and Ujica offer a penetrating insight into the televised revolution as an example of intertextual filmmaking.

The Ethnographic Conditions of the Archive

The assumption that archival forms have specific mnemonic functions and hold a key to the door of historical experience also pertains to what may be designated as the archive's ethnographic condition. Be it the scripted spaces of homo Sovieticus or the drive toward the amassment of snapshots, domestic photography allows us to see the archive as a site where society and its habits are given shape. Archives constitute an economy of production, exchange, and transmission of images. Or, as Terry Smith's neologism describes it, an iconomy. This economy of icons, images, and signs exists in a murky sensorium, blanketing the social and cultural landscape. The archive today rests in a state of historical incarceration, played out in media experiences, museums of art, natural history, and ethnography, in old libraries,⁸⁶ in memorabilia concessions, as popular entertainment, in historical reenactments, as monuments and memorials, in private albums, on computer hard drives. This field of production might be described, in the manner of Pierre Bourdieu, as a cultural habitus,⁸⁷ an ethnographic condition. Under this condition, artists enact the archival fantasy as well as the archontic⁸⁸ function of the historian, translator, curator, pedagogue. These functions also include the compulsive hoardings and accumulations that defy the temporal legibility around which certain archival projects, such as that of Jef Geys, are organized. Derrida's designation for this ethnographic condition is archive fever. It is from this sense of the feverish, maddening attention to the archive that this exhibition derives its operating set of idioms.

The projects of Zoe Leonard, Lorna Simpson, Sherrie Levine, Vivan Sundaram, Glenn Ligon, Thomas Ruff, and Tacita Dean operate around the conditions of visual ethnography, especially as each of the works formulates a temporal and iconographic assessment of the archival past. Each of these projects is concerned with the status of images as materials of cultural transaction and exchange. Tacita Dean's Floh (2000)⁸⁹ lends ethnographic insight into the production of domestic photography. Accumulated over a period of seven years from secondhand bins in flea markets across Europe and the United States, the 163 images that comprise Floh can be generally categorized as amateur rather than professional photography. They are consistent with types of images common to most domestic photographic production: portraits of individuals and groups (some quasi-institutional), pictures of objects, vacation shots, snapshots of pets or family. They are what Mark Godfrey calls "species of found photography."⁹⁰ However, though "found" in the conventional sense, these images were carefully selected and resourced for the specificity of their cultural meanings, as much as for their typological differentiations between image species. Though the line between amateur and "fine art" photography is indeed blurred, the so-called de-skilling of the photographic in contemporary art is not at issue here;⁹¹ the concerns of this accumulated cache are fundamentally cultural, and specifically ethnographic in nature. Wielding a sophisticated curatorial acumen, Dean uses Floh to demonstrate the logic of the "artist as ethnographer."⁹²

Thomas Ruff belongs to that small group of German artists whose systematic rethinking of the photographic image emerged from the master classes of Bernd and Hilla Becher at the Düsseldorf Academy beginning in the late 1970s; the other members of this group are Candida Höfer, Andreas Gursky, and Thomas Struth. Since the mid-1980s, these artists have devoted their practice to exploring new formats for conceptual approaches to image making, in a kind of renewal of the Neue Sachlichkeit principles of objective observation developed in Germany in the 1920s by photographers ranging from August Sander to Albert Renger-Patzsch. The idea of direct, unmediated recording of objects was given a serial, conceptual rigor in the Bechers' photographs of flat, unmodulated images of industrial structures on the verge of obsolescence. To this aesthetic Ruff's generation responded with images that, despite their variety, combine a dry, reductive documentary sensibility and ethnographic subject matter. Of the Bechers' former students, all of whom have developed their own critical language, Ruff's approach to photography is the most heterogeneous. Recently, his concerns have shifted to photography's socially embedded contexts, in other words, to the archival aggregates in which formats of photography have been organized, such as picture files drawn from Internet pornographic sites from which Ruff produced his Nudes series.

Machines (2003) continues Ruff's interest in investigating the cultural values, and the corresponding aesthetic and social meanings, embedded in the archive. Like Dean's Floh, gathered from the detritus of the photographic economy, Ruff's Machines are "found" images, obtained by acquiring the photographic archives of Rohde und Dörrenberg, a defunct machine and tool company that operated in Düsseldorf-Oberkassel.⁹³ While Dean leaves her images largely in the state in which they are found, Ruff intervenes in the archive, making clear its status as an object of ethnographic and anthropological interest, as well as endowing it with epistemological and aesthetic functions. By scanning, cropping, coloring, enlarging, and generating significantly larger prints than were initially produced for the brochure of the company's product line, Ruff invests the machines with a totemic presence. Writing about this body of work, Caroline Flosdorff observes that "the context in which Ruff's photographs are now shown is no longer bound to a particular objective (product photography, advertising photography) . . ." ⁹⁴ This shift in context, from product brochure to art photography, is rife with ambivalence: having turned the machines into decontextualized pictorial objects, Ruff enhances their photographic presence. The machines lose all specificity as objects of ethnographic fascination. They have become iconic markers of industrial fetishization. Although his reading of the images deviates from the dry, direct, and seemingly unmediated subjectivity of the Bechers' work, it is in this juncture between decontextualization and fetishization that Ruff's Machines most resemble his teachers' blast furnaces, grain silos, and mine shafts, as they provide a glimpse into a distant industrial past.

Lorna Simpson's layered works encompass the archaeological, the archival, and the forensic. The language of her pictorial analysis always seems to play out in the interstices of the historical and psychic constitution of the black subject. As such, the theoretical and conceptual horizon of her complex examination of race and identity takes on two concomitant structures of archivization: on the one hand, the manner in which the body of the black subject is culturally marked through the process of what Frantz Fanon terms epidermalization,⁹⁵ the idea that race is literally inscribed on the skin; and, on the other hand, the way such marking is reproduced and documented in social and cultural practices such as the cinema, art, and literature. Moreover, Simpson's practice often rigorously specifies the importance of a Foucauldian archaeology of knowledge as a means through which the archival relationship between the black subject and American culture is shorn of sentimentality, and instead revealed as a source for understanding the codes of the racialized image in popular culture. Working sometimes under the auspices of the artist as ethnographer, her concerns are informed by an analysis of the archival remains of what Toni Morrison describes as American Africanism,⁹⁶ that is, the relationship between race and identity in historical representations of blackness in American high art and popular entertainment.⁹⁷

The photographic works included here—Untitled (guess who's coming to dinner) (2001) and Study (2002)—are embedded in this landscape generated from popular depictions and, as Simpson would insist, the misperceptions proper to the discourse of misrepresentations that produce stereotypes of black subjects. In both works, Simpson adopts the photographic studio as the place to construct what will turn out to be an archival realignment, one describing the gulf between the portrayed black subjects—a woman in Untitled and a man in Study, each photographed in a profile style reminiscent of nineteenth-century portraits—and the scenes of representation found in American films and art. Untitled undertakes this structural repositioning by way of aligning the forty-three oval portraits in vertical rows underneath semitransparent Plexiglas. Incised on the left and right sides of the Plexiglas surface are titles of American films produced from the turn of the twentieth century to the late 1960s. The same strategy obtains in Study, but here the titles are taken from paintings in which the black male figures as subject or object—underscored by such titles as Study of a Black Man, A Negro Prince, African Youth. Each of the documented paintings is to be found in the collection of an American museum. In this body of work, Simpson takes a counter-ethnographic approach as a way of entering the archive of the American imagination. Similarly, she has recently turned to the thriving online economy of ebay auctions, where she has been researching and acquiring institutional films produced during the late 1950s and early 1960s. In Jackie (2007), she uses footage from one such film—a three-minute interval in which a teacher instructs a young white boy to draw on a piece of paper—to address the invisible ways in which mental health institutions retrain certain segments of the American population.

The ethnographic conditions of the archive, especially one dependent on the language of appropriation, have consistently animated the critical paradigm of a range of postconceptual photographic practices. Appropriation was at the forefront of the postmodernist dialectic in contemporary art that sought to obliterate the space between an original and its copy. In so doing, it called into question the relevance of the modernist category of the author, the author being, in its etymological sense, the source of authority, of certainty. Archives, as I have indicated, are likewise dependent on the function of their manifest authority as the principal source of historical truth. Glenn Ligon's biting critique of Robert Mapplethorpe's homoerotic photographs of black men in The Black Book resides in this gap between authorship and authority, original and copy. In Notes on the Margin of the Black Book (1991–93), Ligon engages in a concerted deconstruction of Mapplethorpe's objectification of the black male body as a signal source of sexual stereotyping by using a series of textual commentaries drawn from theorists and commentators such as James Baldwin, Isaac Julien, Kobena Mercer, Richard Dyer, Essex Hemphill, and Frantz Fanon. Positioned in double rows beneath the images, the text panels describe the contested ground of this complex issue. Originally, the relationship of white enjoyment to debasement of black male sexuality was not Ligon's only concern in this work. He was equally interested in tackling the homophobic invective spewed by right-wing politicians and fundamentalist Christians, and its circumscription of gay male sexual agency.⁹⁸ However, over time, the troubled relationship between race and sexuality, the black male as a popular ethnographic object in American discourse, became the centerpiece of his analysis. At the same time, the problem of authorship shadows the license taken by Ligon in using Mapplethorpe's images, drawn directly from the pages of The Black Book. Here, conventional issues of authorship must be weighed against the archival methodologies of cultural analysis. In testing the assumption of the putative aura of Mapplethorpe's conservative brand of studio photography, the postmodern work of appropriation echoes Benjamin's explicit point to suggest that what withers is the aura of Mapplethorpe's iconography of black male sexuality.⁹⁹ Ligon's reading of Mapplethorpe is against the grain, setting it off-kilter, placing The Black Book in archival remand.

The issues surrounding postmodernist appropriation, and critiques of authorship and aura,¹⁰⁰ are central to Sherrie Levine's daring, seminal deconstructions of the modernist myths of originality¹⁰¹ in many of her refabrications of well-known works by a gallery of male artistic eminences. Levine's After Walker Evans (1981) is a controversial work because its principal conceptual strategy goes beyond simple appropriation, bluntly challenging the authenticity of a work of art, the nature of authorship itself, and the sanctity of copyrighted material. It must be acknowledged that Levine's rephotographing of Walker Evans's Farm Security Administration (FSA) images was a deliberate provocation, both in its straightforward archival referencing, confounding likeness and resemblance,¹⁰² and, more profoundly, in the silent power of its analysis of the somber fetishization of impoverishment. In a single cut, one is able to go from Evans's work as a set of documentary photographs, with implications¹⁰³ of their ethnographic content writ large, to the very nature of their treatment by Levine as so much archival artifact.

In other words, Evans may be the photographer of these works but not the singular author of the social and cultural phenomenon that engendered them. Looming over the field of representation in which the images of the tenant farmers and their families are contained is a cultural Weltanschauung, one which belongs to the archival memory of the American Depression of the 1930s. Given this tension between authorship and aura, and the explicit deconstruction of both in Levine's work, it is striking that Howard Singerman would make an argument for the explicit authorial and auratic character of

After Walker Evans as a singular work, an object to be seen, an object that can be detached from its framing referent—the work of Walker Evans. Singerman writes that Levine's work challenges the notion of it being mere appropriation or a ghost object by maintaining a distinction: "Against what I perceived as the reduction of the work to its strategy, I wanted to insist that there was something to look at, an object, and more than that, an image that must be taken into account."¹⁰⁴ This claim for Levine's archival project is at odds with dominant theories that reference Benjamin, and, in my view, a unique way of reading Levine's After Walker Evans under the explicit manufacture of an archival artifact.

Appropriation and parody are key devices in many uses of the archive. Here, it is important to foreground the operative logic of these projects and the ethnographic methods underlying them. Zoe Leonard's The Fae Richards Photo Archive (1993–96) draws from a radically different methodological process, namely through the combination of object, story, and parodic invocation of the archive as the space of lost or forgotten stories. The Fae Richards Photo Archive imagines the existence of such an archive of lost stories moldering in trunk boxes in damp basements. Leonard, in collaboration with filmmaker Cheryl Dunye, stages an archival ruse through scripting, casting, staging, and performing the life of an imaginary black Hollywood actress Fae Richards (née Richardson), whose accomplishments have disappeared into the pit of American cultural amnesia, no doubt because of her blackness. In the seventy-eight images that comprise this work, we follow Richards's carefully annotated story from the earliest images of her as a teenager in Philadelphia in the early 1920s, to her heyday as a screen ingenue in the 1930s and '40s, to the Civil Rights era of the 1960s, to the final image of her as an older woman in 1973.

Richards is accompanied by a range of other people: siblings, lovers, friends. Costume, styling, lighting, photographic mood, and the studios where the images were supposedly photographed are designed to correspond to the period being referenced, that is to say, to the archive's specific ethnographic climate. Each image is coupled with a caption typed on a vintage typewriter; misspellings are periodically noted in the typed scripts to indicate where, for example, the typewriter skipped a line or dropped a letter. Handwritten notations add another layer of authenticity to this exacting commentary on lost history and memory. A typical caption includes a detailed annotation fleshing out the characters in the photograph. For example, in a sequence of photographs identified as 4, 42, and 43, the caption reads: "Fae Richards as photographed by Max Hetzl (Monsieur Max). 1938. Max was the in-house photographer for Silverstar Studio and also a good friend of Fae's. Fae posed for these photographs privately, in an attempt to show H. R. Ransin, the studio head, that she could play a leading lady. The studio never allowed these photographs to be released, claiming they 'clashed' with the 'Watermelon Woman' image. Ransin offered x Miss Richards more money and a new contract to appear as a mammy in another Southern melodrama, but she refused." The caption for images 39 and 40 reads: "Fae Richards (center), as she appeared in a screentest for the film 'Merry-Go-Round,' which was never completed. Under pressure from both Fae Richards and Martha Page to give

Vivan Sundaram, "Red" Indians, 2002

Gelatin silver print

15 x 20 in. (38.1 x 50.8 cm)

Courtesy SEPIA and the artist

Richards a 'leading lady' role, the character of a young vaudeville dancer was written into the screenplay. Willa Clarke (on Fae's right) was cast as Fae's dance partner and sidekick. The script went through numerous revisions and the title was changed to 'That Voodoo Magic.' Fae's part was cut back to little more than a cameo, with her dancing in several different 'jungle' costumes while Cassandra Brooke sang the title song, originally written for Fae. Fae left Silverstar Studio during filming, breaking her contract and severing all ties with Hollywood, including her relationship with Martha Page. (1938)." Period authenticity is further augmented by giving the resulting photographs a treatment of patina—intentionally aged, ripped and serrated at the corners, cracked, or sepia-toned with a hint of solarization. These strategies are intended to enhance the believability of the overall work but, contradictorily, they highlight its produced nature, not least because Leonard shows viewers the casting list of the characters.

Whereas the archive is turned into a parody of historical unity and an instrument of social identification in Leonard's work, it is leveraged elsewhere as a form of melancholic return. This is certainly the impression one derives from viewing Vivan Sundaram's images in The Sher-Gil Archive (1995–97),¹⁰⁵

a work that simultaneously evokes the family album and scraps of found photographs. The Sher-Gil Archive details the story of Sundaram's family in turn-of-the-twentieth-century India and Europe, tracing an arc from colonialism to postcolonialism. It is both a public commemoration and an inquiry into identity and the meaning of bonds that tie family to race and nationality. The images are drawn from the rich photographic archive of the family patriarch, Umrao Singh Sher-Gil, the artist's grandfather, a Sanskrit scholar who over many years took turns at the camera photographing himself and his family. To construct this archival meditation, as well as mnemonic mediation, all the images are printed from the patriarch's negatives and photographs. Sundaram uses well-worn devices of presentation: boxes, a line of closely arranged photographs, and four lightboxes each bearing an image of a member of the Sher-Gil family, with their names etched onto the glass cover of the box. The images consist of the patriarch; the matriarch, his Hungarian wife, Marie Antoinette; and two daughters, Amrita Sher-Gil, who will become a modernist artist in Paris, and Indira Sundaram, Vivan's mother. Through these links, the archive unfolds a narrative journey of loss and desire, of the twists and turns of wandering between India and Europe, its evocation of cosmopolitan pleasure laced with ambivalence. Sundaram's work of memory is also a sly peek into the circumstances of a hybrid Indian family that allows the archive to question the issue of authenticity, especially in the manner in which the archive often serves to classify and unify concerns of disparate provenance, be it of race, ethnicity, or nationality.

Throughout this essay, we have been exploring the various conditions of the archive, particularly as it pertains to photography. Despite the degeneration of the photograph under the rapacious machines of mass media, its banalization in popular culture, and its cult of sentimentality, taken together these works probe the complex interests artists have developed, the conceptual strategies used to transform the evidentiary and documentary modes of archival materials into profound reflections on the historical condition. In his incisive reading of Richter's Atlas, Buchloh noted the "post-humanist and post-bourgeois subjectivity" informing the work.¹⁰⁶ This observation can be applied to the works organized under the auspices of Archive Fever as well. On a different level, a noticeable humanist concern drives the analyses found in individual projects. This dialectic structured by humanist and posthumanist traditions casts the whole range of archival production within an epistemological context that far exceeds the issues of taxonomies, typologies, and inventories generated by the artists. Here, "the telling of history as a sequence of events acted out by individual agents is displaced by a focus on the simultaneity of separate but contingent social frameworks and an infinity of participating agents, and the process of history is reconceived as a structural system of perpetually changing interactions and permutations between economic and ecological givens, class formations and their ideologies, and the resulting types of social and cultural interactions specific to each particular moment."¹⁰⁷ Within Archive Fever, the artist serves as the historic agent of memory, while the archive emerges as a place in which concerns with the past are touched by the astringent vapors of death, destruction, and degeneration. Yet, against the tendency of contemporary forms of amnesia whereby the archive becomes a site of lost origins and memory is dispossessed, it is also within the archive that acts of remembering and regeneration occur, where a suture between the past and present is performed, in the indeterminate zone between event and image, document and monument.

December 5, 2007

¹ Michel Foucault, The Archaeology of Knowledge and the Discourse on Language (New York: Pantheon Books, 1972), p. 129.

² Walter Benjamin, "The Work of Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction," in Illuminations: Essays and Reflections (New York: Schocken Books, 1968).

³ Quoted in Geoffrey Batchen, Burning with Desire: The Conception of Photography (Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1999), p. viii.

⁴ See the chapter, "The Surplus Value of Images," in W. J. T. Mitchell, What Do Pictures Want? The Lives and Loves of Images (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2005), pp. 76–106.

⁵ See Stanley Cavell, The World Viewed: Reflections on the Ontology of Film, enl. ed. (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1979).

⁶ Increasingly, digital archives, especially from mobile phones, have become the new technology of candid camera transmission. In cases of serious events, such as the suicide terror attack in the London Underground in 2005, the first images of trapped passengers were obtained from a passenger who recorded them on his mobile phone camera. This development contains the implication of displacing the roving documentary photographer, as users respond to situations where professional journalists may not be present.

⁷ For a critical and extensive discussion of the photographic archive, see Allan Sekula, "The Body and the Archive," in The Contest of Meaning: Critical Histories of Photography, edited by Richard Bolton (Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1992), pp. 343–89.

⁸ Ibid., p. 353.

⁹ For an excellent study of the history of Duchamp's La boîte-en-valise as an occasion to think simultaneously on the legacy of the archival form in artistic practice, its relationship to the ordering of knowledge, and the practice of self-curation, taxonomy, and the dispersal of the archival form, see T. J. Demos, The Exiles of Marcel Duchamp (Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 2007).

¹⁰ For a fascinating exploration of the relationship between the museum and the archive, see Douglas Crimp, On the Museum's Ruins (Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1993).

¹¹ Foucault, The Archaeology of Knowledge, p. 130.

¹² Ibid. (emphasis in original).

¹³ For discussions on the impact of Broodthaers's practice, see Benjamin H. D. Buchloh, ed., Marcel Broodthaers (Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1988).

¹⁴ See Rosalind Krauss, "A Voyage on the North Sea": Art in the Age of the Post-Medium Condition (London: Thames & Hudson, 2000).

Craigie Horsfield

Born Cambridge, England, 1949
Lives in London

Magda Mierwa and Leszek Mierwa—ul. Nawojki, Krakow, July 1984, printed 1990

Gelatin silver print; unique photograph
61 x 57 1/2 in. (155 x 146 cm)

Tate Collection, London

Image courtesy the artist

© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York / ADAGP, Paris

E. Horsfield. Well Street, East London. August 1987, printed 1995

Photographic paper on aluminum
68 x 100 in. (175 x 273 cm)

Courtesy Frith Street Gallery, London

© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York / ADAGP, Paris

Stan Douglas

Born Vancouver, B.C., 1960
Lives in Vancouver

Overture, 1986

16mm film, black-and-white, with looping device and mono optical soundtrack

Edition AP2 of 2

Courtesy David Zwirner, New York

Installation view, Louisiana Museum of Modern Art, Humlebæk, Denmark, 1996
Courtesy David Zwirner, New York

Jef Geys

Born Leopoldsburg, Belgium, 1934
Lives in Balen, Belgium

Day and Night and Day and ..., 2002
Looping projection, silent, 36 hours
Courtesy the artist
© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS),
New York / SABAM, Brussels

Andy Warhol

Born Pittsburgh, 1928
Lived and worked in New York
Died New York, 1987

Race Riot, ca. 1963
Screenprint on Strathmore paper
30 1/8 x 40 in. (76.5 x 101.6 cm)
The Andy Warhol Museum, Pittsburgh
Founding Collection, Contribution The Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts, Inc.
© 2007 Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts /
Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York

Felix Gonzalez-Torres

Born Güaimaro, Cuba, 1957
Lived and worked in New York
Died Miami, 1996

Untitled (Death by Gun), 1990

Stack of photolithographs

Stack: 9 x 44 15/16 x 32 15/16 in. (22.9 x 114.1 x 83.6 cm)

The Museum of Modern Art, New York

Purchased in part through the generosity of Arthur Fleischer

Courtesy the Felix Gonzalez-Torres Foundation

derish, 22
Ind.
I was on duty at a
in Ames, Ind.
I was on duty at a
in Ames, Ind.

Dixie Long, 36
Hutchinson, Kans.
Her daughter, 11, found her dead in bed, a shotgun wound in the head. The beauty shop owner's boyfriend, 42, was held on $1 million bail.

Garnet McCoy, 15
Watergap, Ky.
A freshman at Fordsburg
High School, the daughter of a single mother, was in the stomach. Police say two of her friends had recently attempted suicide.

Johnny Berry, 20, 5, 20, Boone, La., and Forest Hodges, 24, 4, 20, 20, Miss.
Hodges broke into Berry's home in a shotgun and, when he saw Berry's girlfriend, who was sleeping there, he shot her. Berry's 17-year-old brother picked up Berry's 17-year-old brother in a truck near his family's property in Natchez; he shot himself in the mouth.

O.D. Thompson, 29
Benton Harbor, Mich.
His body was found in a yard
in an apartment complex after he was shot by an 18-year-old boy brother had just argued with Parks called him an innocent victim of a drug dispute.

James Gorman, 59
Milledale, N.C.
Identified by his neighbor's death of his wife, he shot himself with a pistol. His son came by the house and found the body in their shared house.

Matthew McQuillan, 22
Tiffin, Ohio
Discontent about how things were going at Tiffin University, he shot himself with a hand gun. Fellow students found the body in their shared house.

Minerva Jackson, 36, and David Jackson, 48
Weoster, Ohio
During a brawl over her drinking, she was killed with a revolver by her husband of two months. A girl whose mother, he turned the weapon on himself, shot as her 16-year-old son, who had heard the first shot. Came running into the room to see what had happened.

J.R. McDonald, 38
Del City, Okla.
Self-employed as a fire de he was shot with a revolver journal over money. A 56-and man was charged with first-degree murder.

Robert F. Helms, 37
Lancaster County, S.C.
The laborer was found dead
at home by police. Killed a suicide.

W. 60
La.
In the back of his vehicle. One of the was later charged with murder.

John Lytle, 50
Baltimore, Md.
An attorney, he shot himself in the chest with a handgun. A friend found his body; gun still in hand.

Marc Perlow, 38
Baltimore County, Md.
The owner of a diamond business was shot with a handgun by robbers who stole jewelry and precious stones.

Wallace Worden, 42
Battle Creek, Mich.
A truck driver was shot by a rifle with a bullet. He later in a suicide attempt two days ago. This time he succeeded.

O.D. Thompson, 29
Benton Harbor, Mich.
His body was found in a yard
in an apartment complex after he was shot by an 18-year-old boy
brother had just argued with Parks called him an innocent
victim of a drug dispute.

Mary Louise Wells, 77
Portland, Ore.
A housewife suffering from cancer, she shot herself in the head with a pistol while sitting in an empty bathtub.

Mary Elliott, 79, and Jack Elliott, 79
Philadelphia, Pa.
After a decade-long history of mental illness, recurring, repeated hospitals, she was shot by her husband, who had security been in the hospital for mental problems. She shot herself with the same handgun.

Horace Wood, 27
Philadelphia, Pa.
He got out of a car to argue with a young man. Three other men approached, and he was shot with a handgun wound to one of the thighs.

Robert F. Helms, 37
Lancaster County, S.C.
The laborer was found dead
at home by police. Killed a suicide.

Robert F. Helms, 37
Lancaster County, S.C.
The laborer was found dead
at home by police. Killed a suicide.

Wing, 57
Ore. of a salaried he shot himself in the chest with a handgun in his mouth.

Elie Samuel Middleton, 58
Chester City, Pa.
His body was found with a gunshot wound in his chest on the ground near a public housing project. Police have no clues.

Arthur Smith, 28
Philadelphia, Pa.
A known drug dealer, he was shot in the chest corner and fell into an alley. He landed on the door of a resident, who called police.

Gregory Blackstone, 30
Memphis, Tenn.
He was shot near his home in the neighborhood of a running dispute with an acquaintance over a drug deal.

David Terry, 42
Big Spring, Texas
The manager of a Burger King in Big Spring, Texas, was shot by a rifle in his home, where his estranged wife still lived.

Anthony Patten, 22
Chicago, Ill.
He made his living by sweeping for an insurance sales. On a street in a city's west side of night, he was shot in the chest with a handgun.

Elvin Blair, 26
Chicago, Ill.
On the street at 2:30 a.m., he got into an argument with a teen-ager who shot him dead and wounded his friend.

Metilda Hiet, 81
Green Valley, Ill.
Long widowed, at 81 health and honest as a private person, she shot herself with a revolver.
Her daughter found her in the bedroom of her home.

Jonathan Ferguson, 17
Martha, Ky.
The high school senior was showing friends the handgun that his parents kept in their grainery store. He put the weapon to his head, apparently believing he had enough to commit suicide.

W. Daley Reed, 77
Lancaster County, Ky.
Depressed about his declining health, the retired and tobacco farmer was in his home with a handgun wound to his head.

14
He came up to her of her apartment to take to her her with a gun.
He has been made.

Pedro Mendez, 32
Houston, Texas
He and his brother argued with some people, who shot them both outside a bar. The brother survived.

Ira Gentry, 36
Odessa, Texas
He had recently separated from his wife when he shot himself with a pistol in his home. She was visiting and heard the shot.

Brandi Johnson, 39
Hampton, Va.
She was shot by the man who lived with her. He claims his gun went off while he was reloading it. He was charged with homicide.

Corine James, 35
Richmond, Va.
Her husband found her and their two children, ages 5 and 4, dead. The wife had been in a bad, the baby smothered, and the mother had shot herself.

Archie Shelton, 27
Whitley County, Ky.
Conspicuously afflicted, the Ohio welder shot himself with a handgun he wanted from his stepfather after visiting his other father in relatives.

Tammy Price, 25
Metairie, La.
A housewife and drug abuser, she was found dead in an apartment in the New Orleans suburbs. There was a gun shot wound in her chest.

Ronald Sassone, 25
New Orleans, La.
A resident of Bay N.E., the husband was in town looking for a job. When driving his car he was shot by an unknown gunman.

Darryl Richardson, 20
Detroit, Mich.
A street kid, he was poor, barely enough to eat. Even Paris, a relayed government, he
was who cared for him and became his legal guardian. But he was unlucky enough at 14 to kill another teenager with a gun. He was in a detention center, returned home and in a community college but couldn't pay any semester. He had learned to wear heavy clothes, says Paris. But he was killed because he wasn't making
the kind of money he needed.
After working all night delivering pizza, he came home at
a.m. and took Paris's pistol from his case. He muffed the gun's hobby would near the shot, then killed himself.

Darryl Richardson, 20
Detroit, Mich.
A street kid, he was poor, barely enough to eat. Even Paris, a relayed government, he
was who cared for him and
became his legal guardian. But he was unlucky enough at 14 to kill another teenager with a gun. He was in a detention center, returned home and
in a community college but couldn't pay any semester. He had learned to wear heavy
clothes, says Paris. But he was killed because he wasn't making
the kind of money he needed.
After working all night delivering pizza, he came home at
a.m. and took Paris's pistol from
his case. He muffed the gun's
hobby would near the shot, then killed himself.

SATURDAY, MAY 6

es, 28
Wis.
In an older room of a shotgun in a rooming house. The room was changed with

Alex Belancourt, 26
Tucson, Ariz.
Unemployed, he was shot with a handgun near a fast-food restaurant. The killer was a man in a pickup with whom he had argued earlier.

Billy Huddleston, 58
North Little Rock, Ark.
Depressed since his wife's death, the retired tax and automotive-supply company employee, known for his charity and volunteer work, shot himself with a revolver.

Everett Kiefer, 71
Applegate, Calif.
In pain from terminal cancer,
the retired man had tried suicide with pills the week before.
He killed himself with a shotgun.

George Ames, 40
Crescent City, Calif.
He was shot by his brother in an argument over a parking space they went to the apartment where he lived alone on Disability and killed himself with a rifle.

Harold Williams, 30
New Orleans, La.
A rapper and the father of two children, he was shot by his brother in a common-law household, who wanted open the door, pistol in hand, looking for his wife.

Moses Townes, 16
Capitol Heights, Md.
He was a high school student playing with a revolver of the home of a neighbor, 14. The younger boy had the gun when it discharged.

Doris Shobe, 38
Detroit, Mich.
She was shot in the chest
by her husband, 50, at about
1:25 a.m. He said his pistol discharged accidentally. Police arrested him, and he is being tried for first-degree murder.

Doris Shobe, 38
Detroit, Mich.
She was shot in the chest
by her husband, 50, at about
1:25 a.m. He said his pistol
discharged accidentally. Police arrested him, and he is being
tried for first-degree murder.

Doris Shobe, 38
Detroit, Mich.
She was shot in the chest
by her husband, 50, at about
1:25 a.m. He said his pistol
discharged accidentally. Police arrested him, and he is being tried for first-degree murder.

6, 32
La, Calif.
For a private party, he shot himself with a handgun reasons.

Thomas Langston, 18
Los Angeles, Calif.
While attending a party at which he had more than a few drinks, he got in an argument with another man and was shot on the sidewalk with a handgun.

Reginald Malone, 24
Los Angeles, Calif.
He was found shot to death in his car with a handgun. Police could provide no more information.

Cornell Ralford, 18
Los Angeles, Calif.
A machinist for a toy company,
he was found shot to death in his car with a handgun in southwest L.A. Police suspect the killing was gang related but have no suspects.

Kevin Burkes, 23
Oakland, Calif.
While standing on 70th Avenue about 10:15 p.m., the unemployed man was shot in the head with a handgun. Police suspect a drug connection.

Joe Woodard, 52
Merrill, Miss.
A self-employed auto-body repairman, he was killed with a revolver by a man with a known history of mental problems.

Stephen Miller, 35
Las Vegas, Nev.
Unemployed, he was shot by a police officer who came to his apartment to investigate a disturbance and found him stabbing a woman.

Allen Ross, 27
Cherry Hill, N.J.
A culinary-arts student, he shot himself in the chest with a target pistol at home.

Susan Duffy, 31
Clinton, N.J.
The day after leaving a suicide note on her desk at her home in Lansdale, N.J., she was found in a wooded area, dead from a handgun wound.

Michael Lezano, 28
Reserve, N. Mex.
A haggard, graying man with dark hair, he was firing a gun into the air for fun but someone—accidentally—ruled—shot himself in the head.

W. 16
Md.
He was shot in the head with a handgun wound.

Carlton Martin, 23
Brockton, Mass.
He was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Ronald Adams, 47
Melrose, Mass.
He was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Richard Norman, 56
St. Paul, Minn.
He was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Bourman Thengkhon, 20
St. Louis, Mo.
He was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Edward Walton, 47
Marion County, Fla.
He was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Silvano Beria, 23, and Pedro Rodriguez, 34
Winnsboro, Fla.
After the two shot and killed a man, a police officer shot at them at a house.

Carlton Bean, 28
Moultrie, Ga.
He was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Robert Ruffin, 31
Roberts, Ga.
A construction worker, he was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Robert Ruffin, 31
Roberts, Ga.
A construction worker, he was shot in the head
with a handgun wound.

Ilán Lieberman

Born Mexico City, 1969
Lives in Mexico City

Niño Perdido (Lost Child), 2006–7 30 drawings from a larger series
Graphite on paper
Each 1 x 0.83 in. (2.6 x 2.1 cm)
Courtesy the artist

Verónica Cristina Ochoa Ortiz
Age: 17 years
Height: No information Characteristics: No information
Date of disappearance:
Huizachez, Sinaloa, August 8, 2004

Andrea Muñoz Miranda
Age: 12 years
Characteristics: Does not pronounce the letter "R" correctly
Date of disappearance: El Jardín Neighborhood, Municipality of Matamoros,
State of Puebla, January 23, 2006

Irma Zapata Bautista
Age: 12 years
Height: 1.55 meters
Characteristics: Small scars on both arms
Date of disappearance: San Martín de Porres Neighborhood, Municipality of Atizapán de Zaragoza, State of Mexico, January 18, 2006

Edgar Alexis Cano Rodríguez
Age: 4 years
Height: 80 centimeters
Characteristics: Black mole on left leg
Date of disappearance: Izcalli Ixtapaluca Neighborhood, Ixtapaluca, State of Mexico, July 3, 2004

Ángel Nandxo Guerra Cruz
Age: 13 years
Height: 1.69 meters
Hair: Straight, black
Characteristics: Scar on left side of forehead
Date of disappearance: Ceylán Neighborhood, Tlanepantla, State of Mexico, July 28, 2005

Miguel Ortiz Ortiz
Age: 14 years
Height: 1.45 meters
Characteristics: Has language difficulties
Date of disappearance: Álvaro Obregón Neighborhood, Borough of Iztapalapa, Mexico City, February 15, 2005

Andoni Escobar Vázquez
Age: 1 year
Height: 80 centimeters
Hair: Straight, long, light brown Eyes: Small, light brown
Date of disappearance: Jesús de Monte Neighborhood, Huixquilucan, State of Mexico, December 23, 2005

Ana Jazmin Moreno López
Age: 5 years
Height: 1.10 meters
Hair: Thin, straight, dark brown
Date of disappearance: Guanajuato, Guanajuato, October 14, 2004

Osvaldo Gómez Flores
Age: 6 years
Height: 1.00 meters
Complexion: Regular Characteristics: Scar on left brow and rash on left cheek
Date of disappearance: Los Reyes Ocotitlán,
State of Mexico, December 3, 2005

Dolores Blancarte González
Age: 16 years
Height: 1.58 meters
Hair: Straight, black
Date of disappearance:
Barrio San Miguel, Borough of Xochimilco,
Mexico City, March 4, 2005

Viridiana Corro Ordoñez

Age: 13 years

Height: 1.53 meters

Characteristics: Freckles on face and chin dimple

Date of disappearance: San Pablo Tultepec, State of Mexico, February 27, 2006

José de Jesús Ortega Pícen

Age: 5 years

Height: 1.10 meters

Characteristics: His father took him without permission

Date of disappearance: Ixtapaluca, State of Mexico, July 9, 2002

Noé Saúl Bravo López

Age: 7 years

Height: 1.20 meters, Complexion: Medium

Hair: Straight, dark brown

Eyes: Dark brown, large

Characteristics: Scar on right cheek, stutters

Date of disappearance: Hank González Neighborhood, Ecatepec, State of Mexico, June 16, 2006

Luis Hernández Villalobos

Age: 4 years

Height: 1.00 meters

Hair: Straight, dark brown

Date of disappearance: Ciudad Cuauhtémoc Neighborhood, Ecatepec, State of Mexico, April 2, 2006

Emma Celestina Silava Cruz
Age: 3 years
Height: 80 centimeters
Eyes: Small, dark brown
Date of disappearance: Borough of Iztapalapa, Mexico City, March 4, 2006

Adriana Rodriguez Armenta
Age: 16 years
Height: 1.65 meters
Hair: Straight, brown
Date of disappearance: Centro Neighborhood, Borough of Cuauhtémoc, Mexico City, May 15, 2006

José Atlahua Chipahua
Age: 11 years
Height: 1.40 meters
Complexion: Thin, Hair: Dark brown and straight, Eyes: Light brown, small Characteristics: Scar on left brow
Date of disappearance: Borough of Iztapalapa, Mexico City, January 26, 2006

Fernando Romero Vargas
Age: 9 years
Height: 1.10 meters
Complexion: Thin
Hair: Straight, dark brown
Eyes: Dark brown, slanted Characteristics: Mole right side of neck
Date of disappearance: Chicoloapan, State of Mexico, August 13, 2006

Katerin Espindola Valdés
Age: 1 year
Height: 60 centimeters
Hair: Straight, short, brown
Date of disappearance: Borough of Iztapalapa, Mexico City, November 17, 2005

Guadalupe Jazmín Patiño Soto
Age: 15 years
Height: 1.45 meters
Hair: Straight, light brown
Date of disappearance: Unidad Floresta, Los Reyes, La Paz, State of Mexico, April 18, 2006

Ángel Palacios Ramírez
 Age: 4 years
 Height: 1.00 meter
 Eyes: Large, dark brown
 Date of disappearance: Borough of Iztapalapa, Mexico City, September 8, 2005

Sandra García Ontiveros
 Age: 14 years
 Height: 1.48 meters, Complexion: Thin
 Hair: Dark brown and straight Eyes: Dark brown, small
 Characteristics: Mole left side of upper lip
 Date of disappearance: Borough of Benito
 Juárez, Mexico City, May 26, 2006

Luis Enrique Cortés Yáñez
 Age: 10 years
 Height: 1.30 meters
 Complexion: Thin
 Hair: Straight, black
 Eyes: Dark brown, small Characteristics: Bump on right side of forehead
 Date of disappearance: Chimalhuacán, State
 of Mexico, December 23, 2006

Miriam Lizeth Rosales Zavala
 Age: 15 years
 Height: 1.55 meters
 Hair: Light brown, curly
 Eyes: Dark brown, large Characteristics: Moles, one on right side of chin and the other on right cheek
 Date of disappearance: Borough of Cuauhtémoc, Mexico City, May 30, 2006

Daniela Xóchitl Elizarrarás Rojas
Age: 6 years
Height: 1.30 meters, Complexion: Thin
Hair: Black and straight
Eyes: Dark brown, large Characteristics: Mole below the navel
Date of disappearance: Tultepec, State of Mexico, May 31, 2006

Josmar Quintana Espinoza
Age: 2 years
Height: 1 meter, approx., Complexion: Thin
Hair: Straight, dark brown
Eyes: Black, medium Characteristics: Large mole on waist
Date of disappearance: Chilpa, Tultitlán, State of Mexico, August 15, 2006

Liliana Martínez Álvarez
Age: 13 years
Height: 1.44 meters, Complexion: Regular
Hair: Straight, dark brown
Eyes: Light brown, large Characteristics: Spot on right arm
Date of disappearance: Tlalmanalco, State of Mexico, November 6, 2006

Karen Aline Chávez García
Age: 15 years
Height: 1.56 meters
Complexion: Thin
Hair: Straight, black
Eyes: Light brown, large Characteristics: Small scar on the nose and another on one arm
Date of disappearance: Borough of Cuauhtémoc, Mexico City, January 28, 2007

Estefanía Hernández Rodríguez
Age: 1 year
Height: 70 centimeters, approx.
Complexion: Thin
Hair: Curly, blond
Eyes: Honey, large, round Characteristics: Red scar on nape
Date of disappearance: Coatzacoalcos, Veracruz, December 13, 2006

Pamela Navarrete Flores
Age: 6 years
Height: 1.15 meters, approx.
Complexion: Thin
Hair: Straight, dark brown
Eyes: Dark brown, large Characteristics: Has spot on back
Date of disappearance: Borough of Gustavo A. Madero, Mexico City, May 5, 2002

Hans-Peter Feldmann

Born Düsseldorf, Germany, 1941
Lives in Düsseldorf

9/12 Front Page, 2001

100 newspapers

Dimensions variable

Courtesy 303 Gallery, New York

© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS),
New York / VG Bild-Kunst, Bonn

Daily Mail

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2001

Newspaper of the Year 40p

SPECIAL EDITION

APOCALYPSE

New York. September 11, 2001

30 PAGES OF PICTURES AND SPECIAL REPORTS

www.elmercurio.com

EL MERCURIO

EDICIÓN DE 56 PÁGINAS

L. IL. SI Y EL REGISTRO $300

FUNDACIÓN VALPARAÍSO EL 12 DE SEPTIEMBRE DE 1827 / AÑO CLXXXV N° 18.800 / INC

SANTIAGO DE CHILE, MIÉRCOLES 12 DE SEPTIEMBRE DE 2001

FUNDADO EN SANTIAGO EL 1 DE JUNIO DE 1830 / AÑO CXIV N° 38.801 DE PROPIEDAD

Nueva York y Washington:

Aterrador ataque a EE.UU.

Terroristas estrellan aviones con pasajeros contra las Torres Gemelas y el Pentágono.

Alcalde de Nueva York: Cifra de muertos podría llegar "a más allá de lo soportable".

Bolsas mundiales suspenden operaciones para controlar el desplome de las acciones.

IMPACTOS EN LAS TORRES GEMELAS.—Una enorme bola de fuego y de humo emerge de la segunda torre atacada, en el instante en que el avión sacudado estaba en el interior del edificio. Abajo se ve el humo de la otra torre devastada minutos antes.

RELATOS:

Varios rehenes informaron de la situación desde sus celulares.

A 4

SEGURIDAD:

Estados Unidos pone en alerta máxima a las F.F.A.A. dentro y fuera del país.

A 6

CHILE:

Policía refuerza la vigilancia en embajadas de EE.UU., Israel y Arabia Saudita.

C 1

ECONOMÍA:

Los expertos pronostican un retraso en la recuperación mundial.

B 1

Internet: La red funcionó pese a la alta demanda.

A 10

Cultura: El arte comó sus puertas en señal de duelo y temor.

C 18

Sociedad: A la distancia, la angustia invade a los chilenos.

A 12

FRASE DEL DÍA

"No se equivocaron: Estados Unidos corrió y saltó a los estadounidenses de esta colchada".

COMPARA EL 30/01
Presidente de Estados Unidos

7 806610 000013

EL CARIBE

• MIÉRCOLES 12 DE SEPTIEMBRE DE 2001
Santo Domingo, República Dominicana
Año 18 No. 1128
• $ 10.00

¡Saludos! "Desasossegada cosa es la prosperidad". Séneca

El presidente norteamericano juró a su país que perseguirá a los responsables hasta llevarlos a la justicia

Golpe al corazón del mundo

Miles de personas se presumen muertas tras los ataques terroristas en Washington y Nueva York, aunque los organismos de socorro no pierden la esperanza de encontrar supervivientes entre los escombros

Nacional

Los dominicanos sufren el terror

Página 8
Varias ciudades del país en Nueva York sufrieron su peor momento. Muchos de ellos también laboraron en los torres gemelas y se desmoronaron cuando pudieron estar entre las víctimas.

Economía

El lastre emocional de la tragedia

Página 17
Los dedicados periodistas dominicanos reflejaron que el lastre emocional de los dominicanos por el ataque terrorista contra Estados Unidos de ayer tardará meses o incluso años en superar el trauma.

Salud

Afectada la economía local

Página 21
El turismo, los viajes, los negocios y las reuniones serán las regiones del país más afectadas por los ataques de ayer. Los recursos se agotaron rápidamente. Sin embargo, el turismo puede ser el más perjudicado.

Sumario

LA SCI Y LA SOCIEDAD CIVIL COMENZAN EN CUATRO AÑOS
Cuatro de los jueces presentados ayer en las oficinas de la Suprema Corte de Justicia coinciden con los perfiles propuestos por la sociedad civil, que alarga por que los magistrados que tienen las vacantes del tribunal sean de Centro de Justicia.

Página 11 Nacional

PRISIONES ASUME EL CONTROL DEL CENTRO DE MENORES
La Dirección General de Prisiones asumió el control del centro para menores luego de denuncias de torturas a los internos. En tanto, la Procuraduría General ordenó una investigación inmediata de los actos.

Página 12 Nacional

DAVID GÓMEZ SE OPONE A LA EXTENSIÓN DEL PERÍODO
David Gómez, principal promotor de la reforma constitucional, asegura que la renovación del período constitucional es un hecho y pidió a los principales líderes políticos intervenir ahora para que no se concrete.

Página 13 Nacional

Índice

OPINIÓN Página 14
ALUMNA Página 15
ESQUELAS Página 16
EL TIEMPO Página 17
LA CARTILERA Página 18

RETIRO DE ORO

LA JUBILACIÓN QUE USTED SIEMPRE SONÓ

AFP CARIBALICO

Zwei Flugzeuge schlugen gestern Morgen wie Kamikaze-Flieger in das World-Trade-Center ein: Rauch strömt aus einem Turm, ein Feuerball umhüllt den zweiten dahinter.

Politik heute auf Seite 12

4 390247 101506 30037

Die USA sind gestern vor den Augen der ganzen Welt von einer beispiellosen Terrorwelle überrollt worden, bei der wahrscheinlich hunderte, möglicherweise tausende Menschen getötet wurden. Ziele waren die Symbole der amerikanischen Macht: die Millionenstadt New York und die Hauptstadt Washington. Es herrschte das völlige Chaos. Zuerst stürzten im Kaminkeuzel im Abstand von 18 Minuten offenbar zwei Passagierflugzeuge in die beiden Hochhauskerne des World Trade Centers in New York, in denen etwa 50 000 Menschen arbeiten. Beide Türme stürzten ein, Manhattan war völlig in Rauch und Qualm gehüllt. Offenbar explodierte noch ein weiteres Gebäude. Etwas später stürzte ein Flugzeug auf das Pentagon in Washington, das ebenfalls teilweise einstürzte. Vor dem Außenministerium explodierte eine Autobombe. Das Verteidigungsministerium, das Weiße Haus und alle weiteren Regierungsgebäude wie das Außen- und das Finanzministerium wurden evaluiert. US-Präsident George W. Bush sprach von einem „offenkundigen Terroranschlag auf unser Land“. Und: „Wir erleben heute eine nationale Tragödie.“ Bush kündigte umfassende Untersuchungen an. Die Verantwortlichen für diese Anschlagsserie würden gejagt. Der Präsident, der zum Zeitpunkt der Anschläge in Florida war, wollte umgehend nach Washington zurückkehren. Aus Geheimdienstkreisen verlautete, die Urheber seien nicht bekannt. Es handelt sich aber sicher um Terror. „Das war nicht das Werk eines schlecht ausgerüsteten Feindes. Aber es ist noch zu früh, um etwas zu sagen.“ Wie es hieß, wurde mindestens eines der Flugzeuge in Boston entführt. Es war eine Boeing 767 der American Airlines, die auf dem Weg nach Los Angeles war. Das zweite wurde offenbar auf dem Flughafen Newark in New Jersey entführt. In den USA wurden alle Flugzeugstarts abgesagt. In New York rannten die Menschen in Panik auf die Straßen.

Wempe AG, 35103 Kassel, Tel. 0561/209-0, Fax 0561/209-220

PATEK PHILIPPE
GENÈVE

Wortblende Ref. 5113
18 K. Rostfrei, Automatik, Werkkalam.

WEMPE

Feinuhrenmacher und Juwelier seit 1878

Karlshorndamm 31A, Tel. 030/2780 6870 Fax 030/2780 6871
Hauptkasselerstr. 43, Tel. 030/27 28 99 00

Düsseldorf
EXPRESS

Mittwoch, 12. September 2001

80 Pf

Jahrgang 39, Nr. 212

DÜ * F 1377

Bin Laden: Sein Terror erschüttert die Zivilisation

Krieg gegen Amerika

...und Palästina lacht und feiert

Das Inferno von Amerika Stundenbuch
des Terrors

Seite 2/3

Super-Model Heidi Klum
Ich sah die
Katastrophe

Seite 2

Welt am Rande des Krieges
Bush droht mit
Vergeltung

Seite 4

Wut, Trauer, Hamsterkäufe
Deutschland in Terror-Angst

Seite 4

Peter Scholl-Latour
Wir sind völlig
schutzlos

Seite 5

Osama Bin Laden Drahtzieher
des Terrors

Seite 6

Die Welt weint
Stimmen zum Terror-Anschlag

Seite 7

Düsseldorf
trauert
Wie wir mit den
Opfern fühlen

Seite 21, 22

Düsseldorfer Flughafenbrücke
A 44: Das letzte Stück ist drin!

Seite 21

Das Wetter
15°
Wolkig, örtlich etwas Regen
Noch mehr Wetter: Seite 12

Meine Sterne heute

Die Börse
*Stand 11 Uhr DAX: 4273,53 +395,60
Dollar 2,1619 DM -0,0229
Euro 0,9047 $ +0,0095

Der TV-Tipp
Zauberhafte Hasen
Serie, PPK 7, 20.15 Uhr
Das TV-Programm auf Seite 11/32

LA STAMPA

MERCOLEDÌ 12 SETTEMBRE 2001. ANNO 135. N. 251. L. 1.500 / € 0,77. PREZZO EURO IN ITALIA: € 0,77. PREZZO EURO IN ESTERO: € 1,50. PER INFORMAZIONI: 02 47401. WWW.LASTAMPA.IT

TERRORE NEL CUORE DI NEW YORK, MIGLIAIA DI VITTIME. BUSH: SAPREMO RISPONDERE E PUNIRE I COLPEVOLI

ATTACCO ALL'AMERICA

UNA GUERRA SENZA NEMICI

Marcello Sargi

L'ATTACCO all'America, come lo abbiamo seguito in diretta, in un clima di allarme da guerra che s'è rapidamente diffuso in tutto il mondo, era talmente impossibile fino a ieri che neppure i film più spietati e spensierati lo avevano mai descritto così. Le torri del World Trade Center, edifici simbolo del progresso e del commercio mondiale, erano già state oggetto di un'azione terroristica, ma non avremmo mai pensato di vederle crollare sotto i colpi di aerei pilotati da kamikaze, in una nuvola di fumo che avvolge tutt'a un tratto vite, storia, presente, futuro, soccorritori inermi, fili telefonici e aeree satellitari, la Casa Bianca, il Pentagono, il Congresso, l'effluente sistema di sicurezza americano.

Anche per chi la guerra non l'ha vista e l'ha studiata sui libri di scuola, la sensazione, l'atmosfera ricordano Pearl Harbor sessant'anni fa. Ma è una Pearl Harbor senza Giappone, una guerra senza nemico, contro la quale non serve l'atomica e neppure lo scudo spaziale.

E nel silenzio terrore del dopo, un silenzio rotto solo dal rimbombare lontano e solitario dell'aereo presidenziale di George W. Bush, che per un giorno ha cercato in cielo la salvezza sua e degli Stati Uniti, non c'è solo la debolezza di un paese ferito, della maggiore democrazia al mondo, dell'avversario primo e unico, talvolta, del terrorismo mondiale. No, a ben vedere è la democrazia nel suo insieme che accusa il colpo: è il mondo globalizzato, che vede infrangersi l'illusione di una ricchezza diffusa fondata su un più forte regime di scambi, è l'idea stessa di frontiere più aperte, migrazioni più libere, società più evolute, che si scontra col sorgere di nuovi muri.

L'Italia certo - ma non solo l'Italia - è chiamata a una nuova speciale solidarietà con gli Stati Uniti, alleati che nel ruolo di guardiani dei diritti violati, di avversari delle sopraffazioni, di combattenti delle cause perdute, hanno sempre fatto la parte più importante. Non c'è più spazio per ambiguità come quelle che in passato accompagnavano le manifestazioni ad Aniano, per il Cerchio o contro la pena di morte, per le spallucce fatte più di recente a rispetto della chiusura dell'ambasciata americana a Roma, dopo un allarme terrorismo, per le indulgenze di questi giorni del movimento antiglobal verso la violenza di strada. La ripugnanza per lo schiavismo del Settecento denunciata dalla confidenza di Durban può diventare una comoda scappatoia, se non è altrettanto chiaro l'atteggiamento verso i crimini contemporanei.

Il mondo intero appare vittima di una desolazione in cui, per dirla con Carlo Levi, «Cristo non è arrivato, né vi è arrivato il tempo, né la speranza, l'anima individuale, il legame tra le cause e gli effetti, la ragione, la storia». Ma beninteso, questo non può essere un alibi.

Quattro aerei di linea dirottati e usati come missili. Due colpiscono le Twin Towers che crollano. Le vittime forse ventimila, in azione 55 kamikaze. Jet sul Pentagono, un altro cade vicino a Pittsburgh.

Sospesi i voli, bloccate le frontiere e il porto. Chiusi gli spazi aerei di Israele, Londra e Bruxelles. Stato di allerta in Europa e nelle basi militari Usa. Si segue la pista del terrorista Osama Bin Laden.

Stop a Wall Street, crack nelle Borse europee. In un giorno bruciati 810 mila miliardi. Greenspan e la Bce: pronti a intervenire. Il petrolio a 29 dollari, l'oro balza ai massimi.

L'esplosione causata dall'attacco suicida su una delle Twin Towers. L'altra è già in fiamme. Entrambe crolleranno pochi minuti dopo.

LA TESTIMONIANZA DI UN GIORNALISTA DELLA STAMPA

«Ho visto corpi cadere dalle torri in fiamme»

Giaco Maggi

INTELLIGENTIA NEW YORK

«Due aerei sono sulle Torri quando tutto è successo. Ho visto la prima persona cadere dall'alto. Erano le 9.11. Sembrava già morta mentre cadeva cadendo dalla torre in fiamme. Poi altri, alcuni parevano ancora vivi. Ne ho contati una decina, con i piedi...

DA PAGINA 2 A PAGINA 17

IL DIARIO DI MANHATTAN, «DOWNTOWN SEMBRA POMPEI»

Chiusi i telefonini, i profughi sul ponte di Brooklyn in fila per donare il sangue: «I volti europei, che cosa fate?»

Giaco Maggi a PAGINA 5

COME REAGIRE: E' LA PROVA PIU' DIFFICILE PER GLI USA

Per omelia che va l'offesa, la linea giusta è colpire soltanto quando si è certi dell'identità dell'avversario

Dario Bianchi a PAGINA 17

IL GIGANTE FERITO NON RESTERÀ IN GIOCO

Questa tragedia poteva forse essere evitata se gli americani si fossero subito fatti carico della crisi del Medio Oriente

Nico Man a PAGINA 9

CHIAMI: L'ITALIA E' IN LITTO, IL MONDO CIVILE SI RIBELLA

Messaggio del Presidente al paese: «Offesa l'intera comunità internazionale. Serve una lotta senza quartiere al terrorismo»

Alida Capella a PAGINA 13

COSSIGA: «DA NOI QUALCUNO DIRA CHE HANNO FATTO BENE»

«Chi pensa che l'ordine costituito si possa rovesciare con violenza trova, con le debite proporzioni, giustificazioni all'accaduto»

Marco Colaninno a PAGINA 15

LA STAMPA web

IN BANCA DI ROMA

Carta Desideria

TUTTI I TUOI DESIDERI HANNO CREDITO.

Carta Desideria

www.bancaroma.it

国学英国、日本说明会

FOLHA DE S. PAULO

80
ANOS

São Paulo, quarta-feira, 12 de setembro de 2001

DIRETOR DE REDAÇÃO: OTAVIO FRIAS FILHO • UM JORNAL A SERVIÇO DO BRASIL • ALAMEDA BARÃO DE LIMEIRA, 425 • ANO 81 • Nº 26.480 • R$ 1,70

GUERRA NA AMÉRICA

EUA SOFREM MAIOR ATAQUE DA HISTÓRIA

Explosão em torre do World Trade Center (esq.), provocada por um segundo avião sequestrado; pouco antes outra aeronave havia alvejado o prédio de 110 andares; as torres desmoronaram a seguir, e outro edifício caiu no fim do dia

★ Torres do World Trade Center e parte do Pentágono são destruídas

★ Milhares de pessoas morrem em atentados de autoria desconhecida

★ Bolsas param, petróleo dispara e aumenta temor de recessão global

Aviões de carreira sequestrados por terroristas destruíram ontem o World Trade Center, em Nova York, e parte do Pentágono, nos arredores de Washington, no maior atentado da história. Não há números oficiais, mas policiais ouvidos pela Folha falam em 10 mil mortos, um sexto de todos os americanos vitimados pela Guerra do Vietnã (1961-1975).

O ataque que destruiu dois dos principais símbolos do poder econômico e militar dos Estados Unidos foi o primeiro ao país desde Pearl Harbor, em 1941.

O presidente dos EUA, George W. Bush, prometeu em pronunciamento à nação caçar e punir "os terroristas que cometeram esses atos e aqueles que os abrigam". O principal suspeito é o terrorista saudita Osama bin Laden, refugiado no Afeganistão. O Taleban, grupo extremista islâmico que controla quase todo o país, nega.

O ataque começou por volta de 8h45 (9h45 no horário de Brasília), momento em que um Boeing-767 foi jogado contra uma das torres de 110 andares do World Trade Center. Bombeiros tentavam esvaziar os prédios quando a segunda torre foi atingida, causando o pânico. As TVs, que transmitiam ao vivo, mostraram pessoas se jogando de alturas superiores a 200 metros, antes que as torres desabassem, entre 11h e 11h30 (horário brasileiro). Pouco antes, um terceiro avião atingiu o Pentágono, sede do Departamento de Defesa dos EUA.

Pelo menos 266 foram mortos nos quatro aviões sequestrados, dois da American Airlines e dois da United — os três que atingiram alvos e um que caiu na Pensilvânia, por motivo ainda desconhecido.

Pela primeira vez na história, todos os vôos no país foram suspensos. A sede da ONU e todos os prédios públicos de Washington, incluindo a Casa Branca e o Congresso, foram esvaziados. As fronteiras com o México e Canadá, fechadas. Seguradoras calculam um prejuízo de US$ 5 bilhões só no World Trade Center.

O ataque foi condenado pelo líder palestino Yasser Arafat e por opositores dos americanos, como governantes do Oriente Médio, da China e da Rússia. Em países árabes, a população saiu às ruas para comemorar.

Como consequência dos atentados, a Bolsa de Nova York e a Nasdaq suspenderam as operações e anunciaram que não abrirão hoje. Em todo o mundo, houve uma corrida dos investidores para comprar ouro. O preço do petróleo disparou. O dólar atingiu o recorde do Real: chegou a R$ 2,677 e fechou a R$ 2,66.

A noite, duas pessoas foram presas e um caminhão de explosivos, interceptado, em Nova York. Página 80 e 81

AVISO

A Folha circula hoje com outra organização de seus cadernos e seções em razão da cobertura especial sobre o ataque terrorista aos Estados Unidos.

OPINIÃO

EDITORIAIS

Leia "Guerra na América", sobre os atentados e "Economico sob ataque", analisando as perspectivas. Página 82

Estimado(a) leitor(a):
447.003 unidades

ISSN 1414-0723

Pedestres cobertos de fumaça caminham perto dos destroços do World Trade Center

Um cheiro embrulha o estômago

STANISLAO
GONCALVES

O ar está torrado por uma mistura de pó branco com fumaça preta. É noite-dia, mas está escuro como a noite. No que sobrou do edifício, um tapete de papel picado. Há um cheiro doce de quimado, que embrulha o estômago. Os alarques se juntam às sirenes. Não há ordem aparente. Página 83

Washington sente-se vulnerável

MARCO ANTONIO
FERREIRA

O túndalo, repleto por dezenas de bloques, fica caótico. Ninguém podia chegar a menos de três quarteirões da Casa Branca. Turmas, policiais, pedinças e policiais portadores de metralhadoras. A fumaça preta vinda do Pentágono misturava-se à fumaça do edifício de Washington. Página 84

Türkiye

GÜNLÜK SİYASİ GAZETE

12 EYLÜL 2001 ÇARŞAMBA

MARK
685.000
DOLAR
1.430.000
EURO
1.290.000
ALTYIN BÜRSİ VE BİSTİMİNİN GÖRÜLMEZ SİYASALARI

Dünya şokta

Dünya Ticaret Merkezi'nin ikiz kuleleri ve Pentagon'un bir bölümü uçak saldırıları sonucu yerle bir oldu. Şehirler tahliye edildi, ABD'de hayat durdu

Süper güç Amerika tarihin en büyük terör saldırısına maruz kaldı

İki saldırı birden

● Dünyanın en güçlü devleti Amerika Birleşik Devletleri, dün peşpeşe gerçekleşen inanılmaz terör saldırılarıyla sarsıldı. İlk saldırı sabah saatlerinde New York'taki Dünya Ticaret Merkezi'nde meydana geldi. İki kulelerden küçük olana bir nakliye uçağı intihar saldırısında bulunurken, bundan 18 dakika sonra 156 yolcu bulunan Boeing tipi bir yolcu uçağı diğer kuleye göbektan girdi.

Türkler de var

● Her iki binada peş peşe meydana gelen patlamaların ardından, kulelerin büyük olanı iyile bölünerek tamamen çöktü. 50 bin çalışan ile 70 bin ziyaretçinin bulunduğu binada çok sayıda ölü ve yaralının olduğu bildirildi. 1. kulenin yerle bir olmasının ardından ikinci kule de tamamen çöktü. Kulelerde 10'dan fazla Türk vatandaşının bulunduğu kaydedildi.

Savaş alarmı!

● Bayaz Saray, bir uçak saldırısı ihtimali üzerine tamamen boşaltıldı. Bu arada, Pennsylvania eyaletine bağlı Pittsburgh şehrindeki bir havaalanına da kaçırılan bir uçağın düştüğü öğrenildi. Üste genelinde savaş alarmı verilirken, nazmi binaların tümünde insanlar tahliye edildi. New York ve Washington'dan insanlar diğer şehirlere gönderilmeye başlandı.

Pentagon da vuruldu

Dünyanın en iyi korunan binası saldırı sonucunda yerle bir oldu

● Pentagon'un vurulması üzerine ABD Ordusu en yüksek düzeyde alarma geçti. "Yaşayan şehir" denilen Pentagon'un bir bölümü, patlamanın 20 dakika sonrasında çöktü. İkinci bir saldırı Himalayelerine karşı bina boşaltıldı. Pentagon'dan sonra Senato binası, alayev merkez Washington Mall, Ticaret Bakanlığı ve Devletler Bakanlığı'nda da peş peşe saldırılar gerçekleşti. Amerikan Federal Sivil Havacılık Bürosu bütün uçuşları yasakladı.

DURUM

Yılmaz ÖZTUNA

Pax Americana'ya saldırı

Yazın dün akşam saat 18'deki bölgeye göre kalamaya atılmıyor. Tarihin en büyük terör saldırısı, New York ve Washington şehirlerini alt üst etti. Paris, Birleşik Amerika'dan Avrupa'ya yayıldı.

E-mail: yilmaz.oztuna@trn.net.tr

BUSH: İntikam alacağız

Sesi titriyordu

● Saldırı haberini Florida'da olan ABD Başkanı Bush, ülkesine yapılan saldırılar üzerine saat 10'da konuşmaya başladı. Canlı yayında ağlamakla bir sesle konuşan Bush, "Saldırıyı yapanları kesinlikle bulacağız ve ABD'ye yaptıkları keskinlikle karşılık vererek bırakmayacağız" dedi.

北京晚报

BEIJING EVENING NEWS

2001年9月12日 星期二
农历辛巳年 七月廿五

1945年12月11日

天气消息 今夜

華南多云 降水概率 10%
南轉北一二級 最低氣溫 16℃

明天

晴转多云 降水概率 20%
北转南二三级 最高气温 27℃

一天只需¥1.93
缓解胃胀

吗丁啉

5. 2002

有效緩解胃脹、胃堵、胃脹痛、惡心、消化不良、恢復胃動力 請嗎丁啉[®]胃動力

重要新闻

九运会火炬传递 点火起跑仪式 在京隆重举行

江泽民点燃主火炬

新华社讯 中共中央总书记、国家主席江泽民昨天亲手点燃了中华人民共和国第九届全运会火炬“走进新时代”火炬传递主火炬，这标志着充分体现国家富强、祖国统一和民族大团结景象的规模盛大的火炬传递活动正式在全国范围内展开。胡锦涛、李岚清等党和国家以及各界人士 2000 人出席了点火仪式。

九运火炬在京传递

本报讯(记者刘英)今天上午,第九届全国运动会“走进新时代”火炬传递活动北京市火炬传递起跑仪式举行。全国火炬传递活动将在各个城市展开,北京是第一站。火炬由北京市委书记贾庆林点燃。 116 张宏江摄 113

中国领事紧急行动 世贸爆炸热线开通

本报讯(记者程胜)外交部官员今天上午向记者透露:纽约世贸中心爆炸发生后,外交部、中国驻美国大使馆、中国驻纽约总领事馆、中国常驻联合国代表团开通热线,为大家提供最快的信息咨询服务。据来自纽约领馆的最新消息:由于爆炸现场美方已经全部封锁,所以华人华裔的伤亡人数和姓名还没有具体准确的资料。

外交部热线电话为:69663526
中国驻美国大使馆:电话:+1-202-3282600,3282551 传真:+1-202-3282582 电子邮箱:WFBMA@
TEROCHINA@EMBAOSS.ORG 地址:
2300 CONNECTICUT AVENUE,N.
WASHINGTON D.C.20008,USA.网址:
WWW.CHINA-EMBAOSS.ORG
中国驻纽约总领事馆:电话:+1-212-6135500,7369301 传真:+1-212-6502528 地址:520 17TH AVENUE,
NEW YORK NY 10036,USA 信箱:
1007 网址:WWW.NYCONSULATE.
PRICHINA.ORG. 中国常驻联合国代表
团:国家地区号:001-212 电话:直拨:
6556100 办公室:6556109 传真:
6347623 6347626(秘书局) 6556105
(办公室) 地址:350 EAST 33TH
STREET,NEW YORK, NY 10016,USA
电子邮箱:CHINU@UNDP.ORG

两架飞机撞世贸 一架飞机撞击五角大楼 一架坠毁 国会山国务院发生爆炸 世贸大厦倒塌

美国遭受空前大劫难

江泽民昨晚致电布什表示深切慰问 江泽民对我在美人员的安全深表关切

正在倒塌的紐約世貿大廈

第二架飞机撞向世贸大厦

昨天纽约的早晨

昔日的美丽 (以上照片均佳林摄)

本报综合新华社消息 美国东部地区11日发生一系列严重袭击事件。纽约的世界贸易中心和位于华盛顿的美国国防部所在地五角大楼等重要建筑均遭到袭击,造成重大人员伤亡,具体伤亡情况不详。

北京时间9月11日晚,国家主席江泽民致电美国总统布什: 获悉9月11日纽约和华盛顿地区一些地方受到严重袭击,造成重大人员伤亡。我谨代表中国政府和人民,向你并转达你,向美国政府和人民表示深切的慰问,并对死者家属表示哀悼。中国政府一贯谴责和反对一切恐怖主义的暴力活动。

国家主席江泽民昨夜对中国驻美机构人员、留学人员、旅美华侨和在美港澳台同胞的安全深表关心。中国政府已于当

夜指示中国驻美大使馆、驻美各总领事馆、常驻联合国代表团立即采取措施,给所有受到伤害的同胞提供一切必要的帮助。外交部发言人朱邦尧昨天说,我们对此深感震惊。

事件 在纽约当地时间上午8时50分(北京时间晚8时50分),被劫持的美洲航空公司第11次航班客机撞向纽约世界贸易中心大楼北楼。这架飞机是从波士顿飞往洛杉矶的,机上有乘客和机组人员共92人。9时08分,被劫持的美洲航空公司第77次航班客机撞向纽约世贸中心大楼南楼。该机从华盛顿飞往洛杉矶,机上有64人。两架客机倒塌后,附近又有一座47层的大楼于当地时间当天下午倒塌。

事件二 在华盛顿,当地时间上午9时30分,美国联合航空公司的第175次航班客机撞向五角大楼,机上已有65人。五角大楼一角被毁。此后,美国总统府白宫附近发生大火,国务院大楼、国会山附近相继发生爆炸和火灾。

事件3 在宾夕法尼亚州，当地时间上午10时，从新泽西州纽瓦克飞往旧金山的联合航空公司的第94次航班客机在距匹兹堡东南130公里处坠毁。机上有45人，目前，坠毁的班机客货人员都脱离了险境的状况。

美国总统布什今天上午就上述一系列严重善后事件发表电视讲话说，美国政府“已经采取了一切适当的全面应急措施来保护美国人民”。美国国内和海外驻军“正处于高度戒备状态”，美国还采取了必要的保安措施来确保美国政府的“正常运转”。他还说，美国“正在受到考验”。

<http://www.ben.com.cn> 本版编辑 姜清凤 版面设计 王水

第10728期 今日44版 RMB:0.5

سبيل العزّ أن

تَبْنِي

وتعلي فلا تقنع بأن سواك يبني

إيليا أبو ماضي

KEEP WALKING

Johnnie Walker

12 საგვარამონი
ოთხშაბათი

რეზონანსი

234 (2354)
2001 ყველადღიური გაზეთი

The RESONANCE Daily Newspaper

WWW.opentext.ge/resonance

დაარსდა 1990 წელს

First published in 1990

ფასი 50 თეთრი

საგვარამონი

„მეცნიერების თემატიკის მეცნიერების მუშაობის მიმართული მუშაობის
საგვარამონი“

გვერდი 33-3 გვერდი

განმარტება

საგვარამონის კანონმდებლობის
მუშაობის
მიმართული

გვერდი 33-5 გვერდი პროტესტი

კოლა დავითაშვილის
მუშაობის
კანონმდებლობის

გვერდი 33-4 გვერდი

«გოგოლიოს დედაქალაქი» სისხლის მდინარეები გერაქი, როგორ მსგავსებს გოგოლიოს

მდინარეები არ ყოფილა

გვერდი 33-2-3 გვერდი

განმარტება
საგვარამონის
მუშაობის
მიმართული
მუშაობის
მიმართული
მუშაობის

გვერდი 33-2 გვერდი

განმარტება

შეიარაღებული მკაცრად „გოგოლიოს“ ოფისი დაგეგმვა

გვერდი 33-4 გვერდი

განმარტება

თბილისის „გოგოლიოს“ კარგი მუშაობის
მიმართული
მუშაობის

გვერდი 33-15 გვერდი

განმარტება

გოგოლიოს
ინტერნეტში
ინტერნეტში თამაშობს ქალაქი

გვერდი 33-14 გვერდი

პროტესტი 33-8 გვერდი; განმარტება 33-10-11 გვერდი; საგვარამონი 33-14-15 გვერდი

De Telegraaf

Los exemplar f 7,00 € 0,9

Single	MT	57	Cardinal	220	750	Stake	MT	136	Spence	527	50
Double	CAO	4.58	Gr. Bld.	209	1.58	N.A.A.S.P.	254	4.88	Thomson	80	90
Gas	23F	295	Hospitality	267	91.5	Overseas	275	25	Thornley	224	70
Cable	32	1.76		52	16.26		71.2	73.70	Thorne	190	21
Express				71	4.380	Reynold	775	625	Thorne	182	880
Dark Box	22F	36	Laurels	112	51	Roberts	1070	4.85	Thorne	500	51
(Postcard)	10W	3.61	Marine	223	96	Seawater	570	8	Thorne	19F

www.telegraaf.nl

44 magina'

wednesday 12 september 2011

juude jantgang

Hoofdreductie: mr J. Olde Kalter - E. Bos

No. 35.111

WOORLOG IN VS

Duizenden doden door kamikaze-terreur met gekaapte vliegtuigen

WERELD VERBIJSTERD

Pagina's 3, 4, 5, 6 en 7

DOORLOG IN VS

Duizenden doden door kamikaze-terreur met gekaapte vliegtuigen

WERELD VERBIJSTERD

Pagina's 3, 4, 5, 6 en 7

www.vecernji-list.hr

Večernji list

FRANKFURT
ZAGREB

GOD. XLV BR. 13.623.
SRIJEDA
ZAGREB 12. IX. 2001.

HRVATSKI DNEVNIK S NAJVEĆOM NAKLADOM 2,70 DM

OD NOĆAS
TRODNEVNI
STRAJK U

HRVATSKI
TELEKOM
ODBIJ
SINDIKALNE
ZAHTJEVE

HT-u

PRESUDA
KARLOVAČKOG
SUDA

Otac
osuđen zbog šibanja kćeri

STR. 24

TERORISTIČKI
NAPAD NA
WASHINGTON
I NEW YORK

- Eksplodirala autobomba pokraj State Departmenta
- Udar i na Capitol Hill

AVIONI BOMBE SRUŠILI PENTAGON I WTC

• Još se ne zna broj mrtvih

STR. 23.

www.vecernji-list.hr

Večernji list

FRANKFURT
ZAGREB

GOD. XLV BR. 13.623.
SRIJEDA
ZAGREB 12. IX. 2001.

HRVATSKI DNEVNIK S NAJVEĆOM NAKLADOM

2,70 DM

OD NOĆAS
TRODNEVNI
STRAJK U

HRVATSKI
TELEKOM
ODBIJ
SINDIKALNE
ZAHTJEVE

HT-u

PRESUDA
KARLOVACKOG
SUDA

Otac
osuden zbog šibanja
kćeri

STR. 24

TERORISTIČKI
NAPAD NA
WASHINGTON
I NEW YORK

- Eksplozirala autobomba pokraj State Departmenta
- Udar i na Capitol Hill

AVIONI BOMBE SRUŠILI PENTAGON I WTC

• Još
se ne
zna
broj
mrtvih

STR. 23.

Christian Boltanski

Born Paris, 1944
Lives in Paris

Reserve-Detective III, 1987

Wooden shelves with cardboard boxes and photographs, and framed collages
Dimensions variable

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York
© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS),
New York / ADAGP, Paris

Robert Morris

Born Kansas City, Missouri, 1931
Lives in New York

Detail of Untitled, 1987

Untitled, 1987

Silkscreen, encaustic on aluminum, fiberglass, felt

69 x 57 1/2 x 4 1/2 in. (175.3 x 146 x 11.4 cm)

Courtesy The Broad Art Foundation, Santa Monica

© 2007 Robert Morris / Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York

Eyal Sivan

Born Haifa, Israel, 1964
Lives in Paris

The Specialist: Eichmann in Jerusalem, 1999 Video, color, in English, Hebrew, German, and French with English subtitles, 128 min.
Courtesy the artist

I was an... instrument in the hands of superior powers.

Fazal Sheikh

Born New York, 1965
Lives in Zürich, New York, and Kenya

The Victor Weeps: Afghanistan, 1997

Carbon pigment prints

Each 18 3/4 x 18 3/4 in. (48 x 48 cm)

Courtesy the artist and Pace / MacGill, New York

My father, Haji Gholam Sadiq, and five of my brothers were martyred during the years of the jihad. It is a lucky family that offers the lives of their loved ones to the cause of Allah. They have brought great blessings upon us. It was five years after his death that I dreamed of my father. He sat at a great distance from me looking away from where I stood. He was wearing a white turban and gazed off toward the horizon. I asked him where he was. He turned to me and said that I should not ask such questions, that I would meet him on the day of judgment.

—Haji Abdul

Haji Abdul holding a photograph of his father, Haji Gholam Sadiq, Afghan refugee village, Khairabad, North Pakistan

My brother, Mula Abdul Hakim, and his group of Mujaheddin surrounded the district administration office in our home village. They captured the area and killed the communists. One of those captured was a teacher who pleaded for his life, saying that he was a fellow Muslim. My brother set him free. Several weeks later, the communists retook the area. That same teacher joined them and pointed out those who had been responsible for the attack. He identified my brother. Mula was captured and taken to the office. His body was never returned. In my dreams, he sits beside a pool in a garden silently washing.

—Abdul Aziz

Abdul Aziz holding a photograph of his brother, Mula Abdul Hakim, Afghan refugee village, Khairabad, North Pakistan

My brother, Asamuddin, was killed in the 1988 battle for control of the Mazar-Kabul road. As I sleep, he walks in the streets of our home village with his Kalashnikov slung over his shoulder, just as he did when he was alive.

—Haji Qiamuddin

Haji Qiamuddin holding a photograph of his brother, Asamuddin, Afghan refugee village, Khairabad, North Pakistan

There is no light in the eyes of a childless man.

Abdul Manam, holding a photograph of a child killed in a Soviet bombardment, Afghan refugee village, Khairabad, North Pakistan

Walid Raad

Born Chbanieh, Lebanon, 1967
Lives in New York

We can make rain, but no one came to ask, 2008
16 inkjet prints

Each 17 x 22 in. (43.1 x 55.9 cm)

Courtesy the artist and Paula Cooper Gallery, New York

Lamia Joreige

Born Beirut, 1972
Lives in Beirut

Objects of War, 1999–2006
Video projection (3 chapters on LCD monitors) and mixed media
Courtesy the artist

Nous étions six frères et par roulement on allait remplir de l'eau et on revenait, l'eau était coupée.

Ils n'ont plus de pouvoir réel, plus d'armes, mais ils pensent exactement la même chose.

Pourquoi vouloir aborder le sujet, je n'aime pas en parler, de la guerre.

Anri Sala

Born Tirana, Albania, 1974
Lives in Paris

Intervista, 1998

Video projection, color, 26 min.

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York. Courtesy Ideal Audience International, Paris; Galerie Chantal Crousel, Paris; Johnen/Schöttle, Berlin, Cologne, Munich

Read your lips, Mom!

It was real Anri,
because we were building.

...in terms of the struggle against imperialism, revisionism...

The first unreal and beautiful image of woman was played by Eugeniya Pleskyte in the movie 'Herkus Mantas', one of the two movies I've seen. Then, still being a child I thought that there are certainly no such women around me. Then I used to live in a small provincial town So this principle is possible to apply in reality, because we used to recreate it for ourselves and model the environment where we lived by laws of supposed reality and when finally all obstacles disappeared and everything became available, the reality turned out to be alien changed. Because in my memory it existed as a movie I had seen, since I conjured it up and thought it be seen in my dreams. But when I saw it, I was disappointed, because it seemed too simple compared to my expectations.

image and fantasy. I think that it is closely related to cinematography, because cinematography used to be the main factor in the development of esthetic and moral criteria. This dual interaction with the reality is quite interesting.

Gediminas and Nomeda Urbonas

Born Vilnius, Lithuania, 1966
Lives in Vilnius

Born Kaunas, Lithuania, 1968
Lives in Vilnius

Transaction, 2002
Video, color, 4 small LCD screens
Courtesy the artists
© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS),
New York / LATGA-A, Vilnius

Veronika, just learn to knit,

I will take care of you,

I can't live without you,

I am not able to forget.

Kiss me. Kiss me, kiss me.

I betrayed you.

Harun Farocki and Andrei Ujica

Born Neutitschein (German-annexed Czechoslovakia), 1944
Lives in Berlin

Born Timisoara, Romania, 1951
Lives in Berlin and Karlsruhe

Videograms of a Revolution, 1993
Video transfer to 16mm film, color, 106 min.
Courtesy Harun Farocki Filmproduktion Berlin

Floh: Frisbee, 2000

Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10

20 x 14 1/2 in. (50.8 x 36.8 cm)

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Tacita Dean

Born Canterbury, England, 1965
Lives in Berlin

Floh: Osmonds I & II, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10, Diptych
30 1/4 x 22 1/4 in. (76.8 x 56.5 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Women by Pool, 2000

Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10

12 1/4 x 31 1/4 in. (31.1 x 79.4 cm)

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Yellow car, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10, Diptych
14 1/2 x 45 1/2 in. (36.8 x 115.6 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery,
New York

Floh: Seated Man, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
15 1/4 x 19 in. (38.7 x 48.3 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Sleeping Man, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
15 1/4 x 19 in. (38.7 x 48.3 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery,
New York

Floh: Man, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
21 1/4 x 28 1/4 in. (54 x 71.8 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery,
New York

Floh: Bathers in sea, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
15 1/4 x 21 1/2 in. (38.7 x 54.6 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Baby Lotion, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
14 3/4 x 14 in. (37.5 x 35.6 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Budgie Man, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
24 1/2 x 44 in. (62.2 x 111.8 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Blue Abstract, 2000
Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
32 3/4 x 43 1/4 in. (83.2 x 109 cm)
Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery,
New York

Floh: Budgie Man, 2000
 Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
 24 1/2 x 44 in. (62.2 x 111.8 cm)
 Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Blue Abstract, 2000
 Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10
 32 3/4 x 43 1/4 in. (83.2 x 109 cm)
 Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery,
 New York

Floh: Water Spurt, 2000

Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10

16 1/4 x 20 1/4 in. (41.3 x 51.4 cm)

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Woman who fell over, 2000

Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10

15 1/2 x 12 1/2 in. (39.4 x 31.75 cm)

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Family with Horses and Cow, 2000

Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10

19 x 24 7/8 in. (48.3 x 63 cm)

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Floh: Funny Turn, 2000

Digital Epson print, ed. 8/10

15 1/4 x 23 3/4 in. (38.7 x 60.3 cm)

Courtesy Marian Goodman Gallery, New York

Machines 1027, 2003

C-print with Diassec, ed. 2/5

57.09 x 44.49 in. (145 x 113 cm)

Courtesy David Zwirner, New York

© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS),
New York / VG Bild-Kunst, Bonn

Thomas Ruff

Born Zell am Harmersbach, Germany, 1958
Lives in Düsseldorf

Machines 3440, 2003

C-print with Diassec, ed. 1/5

42.91 x 33.86 in. (109 x 86 cm)

Courtesy David Zwirner, New York

© 2007 Artists Rights Society (ARS),

New York / VG Bild-Kunst, Bonn

75 a 10 a

7
7
3

Untitled (guess who's coming to dinner), 2001
Gelatin silver prints under semitransparent Plexiglas with vinyl lettering
61 x 41 in. (155 x 104.1 cm)
Courtesy the artist

Lorna Simpson

Born New York, 1960
Lives in New York

Study, 2002
 Four gelatin silver prints under semitransparent Plexiglas with engraved lettering
 Overall: 12 1/8 x 37 1/2 in. (30.8 x 95.25 cm)
 Courtesy the artist

Jackie, 2007

Video, black-and-white, 1 min. 48 sec.

Courtesy the artist

Jackie, 2007

Graphite, ink, and watercolor on found drawings

Overall: 24 x 37 in. (61 x 94 cm), framed

Courtesy the artist

Glenn Ligon

Born Bronx, New York, 1960
Lives in New York

Notes on the Margin of the Black Book, 1991–93

91 offset prints, framed, each 11 1/2 x 11 1/2 in. (29.2 x 29.2 cm)

78 text pages, framed, each 5 1/4 x 7 1/4 in. (13.3 x 18.4 cm)

Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, New York

Gift, The Bohen Foundation, 2001

Photographs by Ellen Labenski © The Solomon R. Guggenheim Foundation, New York

All Mapplethorpe photographs © Robert Mapplethorpe Foundation, used by permission, all rights reserved

Installation view, Guggenheim Museum, New York

Installation view, Guggenheim Museum, New York

Sherrie Levine

Born Hazelton, Pennsylvania, 1947
Lives in New York

After Walker Evans: 1-22, 1981

22 gelatin silver prints

Dimensions variable

The Metropolitan Museum of Art,

Gift of the artist, 1995

(1995.267.1-22)

© Walker Evans Archive, The Metropolitan Museum of Art

*Fae Richards is a fictional character conceived by Cheryl Dunye. Zoe Leonard photographed and constructed this archive to tell Richards's story. The cast and crew staged events from Richards's life for Leonard's camera. The photographs have been used as source material for a "documentary" of Fae Richards's life in Dunye's The Watermelon Woman (1996).*

Zoe Leonard

Born New York, 1961
Lives in New York

Excerpts from The Fae Richards Photo Archive, 1993–96
78 gelatin silver prints and 4 chromogenic color prints

Dimensions variable

Whitney Museum of American Art

Purchase with funds from Contemporary Painting and Sculpture Committee and the Photography Committee

Courtesy Tracy Williams, New York

[3]

[4]

Oscar and Frankie

[5]

[9]

Sandra Visconti and Rex Harrison in "Laura and Sirs", a Newmark Studio Production, 1951.

[15]

[26]

[30]

[28]

Fae Richards and Ray Blake in "Black Guns". A Liberty Pictures release. 1942.

[72]

[73]

List of Photographs

- 1.&2. Reba Richardson, Fae's little sister.1924. Photo portrait by Cohen Bros. Photo Palace, Philadelphia. Fae Richards was born Faith Richardson, and later shortened her name.
- 3.Fred DeShields, Strawberry Mansion Bridge,Philadelphia.1925. Fae's lifelong friend. As children, Faith and Fred often sang together on the street for change, billing themselves as a "brother and sister" act.
- 4.Oscar Williams and Fae Richards. Philadelphia. Date unknown. (early 1920's). Williams was a jazz drummer from North Philly. He got Fae her first radio spot-on the Beechy Beechum Contest-with a ditty he wrote and she sang. Some say they were married for a time, even that they had a child together. Others claim Fae rejected his marriage proposal and that he drank himself to death over her.
- 5.Oscar, with Fae's dog, Frankie. Fairmont Park.Philadelphia1923.
- 6.The Van Clyde family (Edward,Irene,Catherine,Eleanor,&Parker). 1928. Fae worked as a servant for the VanClyde's for several years- at least from 1926-1931.
- 7.Eleanor VanClyde with a guest.(possibly Margaret Fitzgerald). 1930. Fae can be seen in the background.
- 8.Martha Page and Catherine VanClyde.1930. This picture was probably taken by Thornton VanClyde(Edward's brother). Thornton, an actor, was friends with Martha Page in the beginning of her career. It was through this friendship that Fae Richards and Martha Page first met. When a bit player backed out of a small, non-speaking part in "Jersey Girl", Miss Page cast Miss Richards in the part of 'the maid'. It was Fae's first appearance on film.
9. Fae Richards. Winner of the Beechy Beechum Bicarbonate Jingle Contest. 1923 or 24.
- 10.Martha Page on the set of "Jersey Girl".1931. Newark Studios.
- 11.Martha Page at Newark Studios. Photographed for the story 'The Girl Director of "Jersey Girl"' in The Philadelphia Inquirer. October,1931.
- 12.&13.Fae Richards and friends. Josie,Bobbi,and unidentified man. June 1926.

14. Martha Page at Newark Studios. Early 1930's.
15. Sandra Vincent and Fae Richards in "Jersey Girl". Newark Studios. 1931.
16. & 17. Fae Richards and Martha Page. Garden State Park. 1933. These two pictures are the earliest recorded of Richard's and Page's off-screen relationship.
18. Film still from "Louisiana Lady". Fae Richards and Hambone Jones. Newark Studios. 1933. This is Fae's first speaking role. The picture was a big box office success, Newark Studios largest-grossing picture to date. Based on its success, Hollywood's Silverstar Studio offered both Martha Page and Fae Richards contracts. Miss Page signed a five-picture deal. The terms of Miss Richards contract are not known.
- 19., 20., 21., & 22. Fae Richards, Martha Page and three unidentified friends at the Harlem Hotspot. 1933.
23. M. Page and F. Richards at a Paramount Studio party for the premiere of "The Scarlet Empress", a 1934 film starring Marlene Dietrich. (newsreel footage of this event also extant in the Richards archive.)
24. Martha Page at work. Silverstar Studio. Hollywood, 1934. photograph accompanied an article in 'Variety'.
25. & 26. Martha Page and Fae Richards, at their home in the Hollywood Hills. Mid-1930's. Exact date unknown.
- 27., 28., 29., & 30. Reba Richardson, ~~and~~ Fae Richards, and Fred DeShields at a party Miss Richards threw for her sister in 1935. These pictures are thought to have been taken by Martha Page, 31. Martha and Fae at home. (mid-1930's)
32. Martha Page. Publicity photo. Silverstar Studio. 1935.
33. Fae Richards. 1936. Publicity photo widely circulated at the time.
34. & 35. Fae Richards, Martha Page and unidentified actress on the set of "Raising Cara". 1936. A Silverstar Production. Richards played the uppity servant girl 'Sara'.
36. Film still. "Mr. Owens Meets His Match". 1937. The picture starred Leslie Randall and Thornton Van Clyde. Fae Richards was featured as 'Alice', the faithful Southern servant girl. 'Alice' tries to protect her employer from the wiles of a young and beautiful gold digger.

37.&38.Filmstills from "Plantation Memories". Silverstar. 1937. Starring Ward Harrison, Bebe Muller, and Fae Richards as 'Elsie - the Watermelon Woman'. This film was an enormous success and Fae received much favorable notice in the press. She became known popularly as ~~the~~ 'the Watermelon Woman', and in fact much of the press from that time refers to her simply as 'the Watermelon Woman', dispensing with her real name altogether.

39.&40.Fae Richards(center), as she appeared in ascreentest for the film "Merry-Go-Round", which was never completed. Under pressure from both Fae Richards and Martha Page to give Richards a 'leading lady' role, the character of a young vaudeville dancer was written into the screenplay. Willa Clarke (on Fae's right) was cast as Fae's dance partner and sidekick. The script went through numerous revisions and the title was changed to "That Voodoo Magic". Fae's part was cut back to little more than a cameo, with her dancing in several different 'jungle' costumes while Cassandra Brooke sang the title song, originally written for Fae. Fae left Silverstar Studio during filming, breaking her contract and severing all ties with Hollywood, including her relationship with Martha Page.(1938)

41.,42.,&43.Fae Richards as photographed by Max Hetzl (Monsieur Max). 1938. Max was the in-house photographer for Silverstar Studio and also a good friend of Fae's. Fae posed for these photographs privately, in an attempt to show H.R.Ransin, the studio head, that she could play a leading lady. The studio never allowed these photographs to be released, claiming they "clashed" with the "Watermelon Woman" image. Ransin offered Fae Richards more money and a new contract to appear as a mammy in another Southern melodrama, but she refused.

44.Fae Richards signs contract with J.Liberty Wells, President of ~~xxx~~ Liberty Pictures, a 'black-cast' film studio in Philadelphia, (photo from a Philadelphia newspaper.1940.)

45.Fae Richards, with members of the Philadelphia chapter ~~xx~~ of the NAACP.(March 1940)

46.Fae Richards and Liberty Wells on location. June 1940.

47.,48.,49.,50.,&51.Fae Richards, circa 1940. Photographs are unsigned, but are attributed to Kenny Long.

52.&53.Scenes from "Souls of Deceit". 1941. Starring Fae Richards and J.Liberty Wells, who also directed the picture.

54.Publicity photo circa 1941. Kenny Long, photographer. Long was a popular black photographer who did most of the studio photography and filmstills for Liberty Pictures.

55. Fae Richards at an art opening for the internationally acclaimed Black sculptress, Zola Hamilton. (pictured with Hamilton.) 1941.

56. Unidentified friend. (No date-late '40's or early '50's)

57. Filmstill. "Mr. and Mrs. Big." Liberty Pictures. 1942. Comedy.

58. & 59. Scenes from "Black Guns". 1944. Fae Richards and Ray Blake. Fae starred as the sultry gangster's moll, Mattie Cooper. It is her most complex and well-known role in race films and elevated her to household-name status among black audiences. Unfortunately, it was also her last film. Liberty Pictures went bankrupt in 1945.

60., 61., 62., & 63. Fae Richards. Performing "When Things Go Blue" at The Standard. 1946. After Liberty Pictures folded, Fae returned to the stage, performing regularly on Philly's South Street, as well as the Horseshoe Club in Harlem, and other venues in Cleveland, Baltimore, and St. Louis.

64. Fae Richards (center) with unidentified friends. circa 1946.

65., 66., & 67. Fae Richards and June Walker. 1955. Fae's 47th birthday party at their home in their home in West Oak Lane, Philadelphia. According to Fred DeShields, Fae and June met while Fae was singing at the Standard. June sat at a stageside table every night for months, always with a white rose for Fae. By 1947, they were living together, and they lived together until Fae's death in 1974, at age 66.

68. June Walker. 1962. Fae's nickname for June was "Champ".

69. & 70. Fae Richards and June Walker. No date. (late '60's)

71. & 72. Fae Richards. 1971.

73. Fae Richards. 1973. Photo signed Leslie Thomas. The last known photograph of Fae.

Vivan Sundaram

Born Shimla, India, 1943
Lives in New Dehli

Four black boxes for the family, detail of The Sher-Gil Archive, 1995–97

Four wooden boxes covered with etched glass containing autochromes

26.4 x 22.4 x 72.4 in. (69 x 43 x 230 cm)

Purchased 1999, Queensland Art Gallery Foundation Grant, Queensland Art Gallery, South Brisbane, Australia

ANRI SHER-GIL
1914-1975

INDIRA SHER-GIL
1914-1975

Artist Index

Boltanski, Christian	122
Dean, Tacita	180
Douglas, Stan	58
Farocki, Harun	172
Feldmann, Hans-Peter	100
Geys, Jef	64
Gonzalez-Torres, Felix	88
Horsfield, Craigie	54
Joreige, Lamia	154
Leonard, Zoe	230
Levine, Sherrie	214
Lieberman, Ilán	92
Ligon, Glenn	206
Morris, Robert	126
Raad, Walid	140
Ruff, Thomas	196
Sala, Anri	164
Sheikh, Fazal	134
Simpson, Lorna	200
Sivan, Eyal	130
Sundaram, Vivan	254
Ujica, Andrei	172
Urbonas, Gediminas and Nomeda	168
Warhol, Andy	84

Archive Fever— Boltanski, Christian— Dean, Tacita— Douglas, Stan— Farocki, Harun—
Uses of the Document in Contemporary Art—
Feldmann, Hans-Peter— Geys, Jef— Gonzalez-Torres, Felix— Horsfield, Craigie— Joreige, Lamia— Leonard, Zoe— Levine, Sherrie—Lieberman, Ilán— Ligon, Glenn— Morris, Robert—Raad, Walid— Ruff, Thomas— Sala, Anri—
Sheikh, Fazal— Simpson, Lorna— Sivan, Eyal—Sundaram, Vivan— Ujica, Andrei— Urbonas, Gediminas— Urbonas, Nomedas— Warhol, Andy—
by Okwui Enwezor—